Saddam gives way on UN ultimatum

From James Bone in New York AND Jamie Deitmer in Washington

RAQ last night struck a deal with he United Nations to allow a new eam of UN weapons inspectors into he ministry of agriculture in Baghiad as early as tomorrow, after 3ritish and American members were dropped from the team.
Rolf Ekeus, the chief UN weapons.
nspector, said after talks with Iraq's UN

imbassador in New York that "the nodalities of the inspection of the buildng of the ministry of agriculture were liscussed and arrived at to the satisfac-ion of both sides". He said he would next the three Western permanent nembers of the UN Security Council -Britain, France and America - to tell hem to drop their threat of military action against Iraq. However, UN optimism seemed unlikely to be reciprocated by the Bush administration, which now also wants to resolve other outstanding problems with Baghdad.

Diplomats were last night pondering whether the new Iraqi gesture was a short-term stalling tactic or a genuine change of heart. Before the agreement was announced, President Saddam Hussein told his people from Baghdad that "the mother of battles goes on".

There was no immediate response from the White House to Iraq's statement but the Baghdad offer appeared to thwart. American intentions. Bush administration officials privately greeted the Iraq ambassador's announcement letting inspectors into the ministry buildings. Lawrence Eagleburger, the American deputy secretary of state, replied: "No, I don't think that is enough." Later, Brent Scowcroft, the White House national security adviser, made the same point. "No, that doesn't end it, because that deals with the tip of the iceberg, and the whole iceberg remains." The administration feels that an inspection of the building would probably yield nothing as the Iraqis have had plenty of time to remove any incriminating documents.

Abdul Amir al-Anbari, the Iraqi am-

He said the team would come mainly from European countries which did not take part in the action against Iraq and it would be given access to the ministry under a certain framework". He said the team would "definitely not" be allowed into the minister's office, but added that Mr Ekeus would be welcome in any office. "We are satisfied that the crisis is over and we hope the operation can be carried out smoothly," Mr al-Anbari said.

The team will now be headed by Achim Biermann of Germany. Five other inspectors will come from Germany. Finland, Russia, Sweden and Switzerland. Two Americans and a Russian will be allowed to work outside the building to examine any documents removed. Insisting that he had picked the new team himself, Mr Ekeus said: "We have a very top team, people of long experi-ence. All of them have been in Baghdad and carried out inspections, some of them several times." James Baker, the US Secretary of State, also toughened his stance yesterday, saying that the allies were "nearing the point of no return". Speaking in Manila, Mr Baker said: "Unless there is full compliance with United Nations resolutions, we seem to be marching in the same direction we marched before."

strikes on Iraq would not be "pinpricks" Diplomatic sources in Washington indicated yesterday that although the scope of any military action was still being debated by America, Britain and France, an ultimatum from the allies to Iraq could still be issued. Any ultimatum could demand that Baghdad complies fully with all United Nations resolutions and it may well call on Saddam to halt attacks on Shia Muslims in southern Iraq.

Mr Eagleburger said on American television yesterday that targets for allied bombing raids on Iraq would be likely to include communication facilities and the Iraqi forces which are still attacking Shia rebels in the marshlands north of the city of Basra.

Algerian stowaway 'thrown into sea'

By Louise Hidalgo

AN ALGERIAN stowaway rescued from the Channel yesterday by coastguards is believed to have been thrown overboard from an oil tanker with his hands tied together after crew members discovered him on board.

The man, aged 24, told British immigration officials that two crew members of the Algerian tanker had tied his hands and flung him into the sea with a lifebelt after finding him hidden on the vessel. The man is believed to have spent about an hour in the sea before being spotted by a French yacht at 2pm, ten miles south of Dover. Airrescue services were called and the man was airlifted by an RAF helicopter to a Can-terbury hospital where he was treated for a slight arm injury and shock. He was then detained by Canterbury police under the Immigration Act. Last night he was being questioned by immigration officers from shimp or there won't be a recovery. It will happen. DAVID Mellor, the national heritage secretary, yesterday survived one of the most critical days of his career as rumours that the Sunday tabloids would carry more damaging allegations about his relationship with an actress failed to materialise.

Tory MPs called for crackdown on electronic eavesdropping as it appeared that The People, which broke the story, had not acted illegally or contravened the newspaper industry's code of practice in obtaining tapes of Mr Mellor's conversations with

Antonia de Sancha. Following a Gallup poll showing that 62 per cent of the population do not think he should resign from cabinet, Mr Mellor looked increasingly likely to "tough it out" against the tabloid press. Travel trade demands licence scheme for bus tour firms

Klein: shake-out of the industry is likely

By Harvey Elliott TRAVEL CORRESPONDENT

MILLIONS of package tour-ists who travel to their destination by coach remain at risk of being stranded by the sudden collapse of their tour operator because the government refuses to set up a for-mal licensing body, the travel industry said last night.

The Association of British

Travel Agents (Abta) has been pressing the govern-ment to set up a licensing scheme as part of the EC directive on package travel, to cover surface transport as well as air travel. The idea has been rejected out of hand by the trade department.

which will rely instead on "bonding" arrangements and the vigilance of local trading standards officers to ensure they are working.

In the wake of the collapse of Land Travel, which result-ed in thousands of tourists being stranded throughout Europe and thousands more losing their holidays, renewed pressure will be lied to the government. pressure will be app-ecutive of Abta, said last night: "What happened last week could happen again in the future. Without powers to investigate the financial security and quarterly re-turns there is no guarantee that firms will have the necessary financial security to bring everyone home who is caught abroad in the event of a failure.

"We still believe that a licensing authority should be set up on the lines of that operated by the Civil Aviation Authority and we have been trying to persuade the government to do this for at least 18 months. They have consistently refused."

The EC wants all package tourists to be protected from tourists to be protected from January I next year and each member government is obliged to produce legislation. Britain has opted for a woluntary bond that would be used to bring stranded tour-ists home. When the pro-

Although the Land Travel collapse was seen as unique and had been widely predicted in the trade, others cannot be ruled out. Howard Klein, chairman of Owners Abroad, Britain's second biggest tour operator, said last night: "The Civil Aviation Administration licenses around 650 tour operators and yet the top 40 provide 83 per cent of all holidays on offer. Further polarisation is inevitable and a shake-out of the industry does seem to be likely later this year."

the Lord Advocate, and the Scottish legal authorities face pressure to bring criminal proceedings against Anton Gecas, a former Lithuanian living in Edinburgh, for aileged atrocities against Soviet citizens in the second world war. But they believe the chances of a prosecution succeeding in Scotland could be hampered by the recent Lords vote which would prevent elderly witnesses in Lithuania and Belorussia from giving evidence against Mr Gecas via a live television link. The government used the Parliament Acts against the Lords last year to bring in the War Crimes Act. The peers repeatedly objected to "dilutine" the law to bring suspects to court for atrocities and said a fair trial was impossible.

Prison racism claimed

Black prison officers are urged today to object more assertively to racist behaviour within the prison system as part of efforts to improve race relations in jails. The prison service is also urged to make racially prejudiced or discriminatory activity a disciplinary offence and to introduce monitoring of employment practices, in a Prison Reform Trust report entitled Black Workers in the Prison Service. The report, which points out that 15 per cent of prisoners are from the ethnic minorities compared with only 3.5 per cent of the population as a whole, says that the percentage of black prison staff is only a fraction of the 15 per cent. It addes that many new entrants to the prison service found race relations training too long and irrelevant.

The research involved 450 pregnant women who worked regularly with VDUs. Dr Colin Mackay of the executive said: "It shows that pregnant women who work, even habitually, at VDUs are not at increased risk of miscarriage."Dr Eve Roman, who led the study, said: "We found it made no difference whether a woman worked on a VDU as part of her general day, whether she used it occasionally or whether her only contact with a VDU was that it happened to be in the same

Blueprint for Majorism?

A new book identifies the public-sector revolution to come, says Peter Riddell

f you are an ambitious Tory backbencher or minister (which of them isn't?) the book you should take on holiday is Reinventing Government, It is the nearest we have had so far to a guide to the Major style of govern-ment. The subtitle of the book (by two Americans, David Osborne and Ted Gaebler, and published in the US by Addison-Wesley) is "how the entrepreneurial spirit is transforming the public sector". It has swept Washington; described as a blueprint both by Bill Clinton. the Democrats' presidential nominee, and by White House advisers. More to the point, the book has been noticed in Whitehall, and read by William Waldegrave and Robert Jackson at the Office of Public Service, responsible for the citizen's charter. The theme of breaking down bureaucratic structures and introducing greater competition goes back more than 20 years. It is a classic illustration of how shifts in policy develop not as a result of a big bang but haphazardly from diverse roots. Public sector reform now has a momentum: and is having a wider impact than has been generally. appreciated . linking privatisation, contracting next few years out, the Next Steps: initiative to create semi-independent executive agencies, and the citizen's charter. Central government could change more in the next few years than it has since its big expansion during and after the second world war. Mr Waldegrave, in his work on public services, looks back to the pamphlets written in the late 1960s by David Howell about the application of business methods to government. These were reflected in the early efficiency initiatives of the Heath era, then revived by Lord Rayner after 1979 and developed in various financial information and management schemes. Within Whitehall emphasis during the 1980s was on managerial improvements within existing structures. The biggest shake-ups were happening elsewhere, in the privatisation of former public industries, in local government and in the health service with the move towards the ethos, impartiality and ministerial purchaser/provider divide.

But ministers have come to accept over the past couple of years that the structure of central, as well as local, government should change and that privatisation on its own is not enough." As Mr Waldegrave put it in a recent speech: "As fundamental as the division between public and private is the distinction between competition and monopoly." The citizen's charter is John Major's personal contribution to this mix. his recognition of those at the end of the queue. So if privatisation was one of the dominant themes of the 1980s, making public services work will dominate the 1990s.

Mr Waldegrave has offered a staged approach, starting with the question of whether the government ought to be involved in any particular function; moving on to

-whether it should be done in-house and how; and linking with measures of accountability such as the various charters. This means ensuring that executive agencies can compete on equal terms with the private sector, not just in devolved management but also in more flexible pay systems. This marches the approach of Osborne and Gaebler. They highlight the shift to what they call entrepreneurial government in America, defining common threads such as promoting com-petition between service providers; empowering citizens by pushing control out into the community: redefining clients as customers and offering them choices; prevention rather than reaction; decentralising authority: preferring market mechanisms; and catalys-

ing other sectors. make convincing apos-tles of the new creed, even if there is too much jargon for British tastes. Mr Waldegrave has argued that Britain was there long before America: many of the initiatives cited by Osborne and Gaebler have been implemented only in local governexpansion after ment across the Atlantic but have already been app-lied in Whitehall.

But this claim understates the range and diversity of changes in America produced by its more plural political system. There are lessons for Britain in the details of various projects ranging from introduc-tion of choice in schools in East Harlem, resulting in much improved performance, to more decentralised budgets on defence bases. Equally significant is how support for revitalising government crosses party lines.

In Britain, the Opposition has. at least nationally, so far been sceptical. It is true, that the adoption of private sector methods and a more entrepreneurial approach have implications for accountablity. These questions tend to be brushed aside by the enthusiasts and need to be debated. Marjorie Mowlam, Mr Waldegrave's new shadow, has also said she wants to see the citizen's chaner approach applied as much in the private as in the public sector.

It will be a measure of Labour's openness to new thinking how far its spokesmen are willing to break away from its traditional producer viewpoint and to accept that government needs to be more responsive to the public. Perhaps Ms Mowlam and her new shadow colleagues should also take Reinventing Government away with them on their holidays. They might learn more from that book than from reading some of the party's endless introspective

ast week's Aids conference in Amsterdam was a depress because of the rising toll of the disease and the confessions of scientific impotence in the face of it. Just as threatening for the future was the clash between Aids activists and the scientists, administrators and drug companies who hold the key to better treatments. Like lunatics taking over the asylum, the more extreme activist groups from the United States have gained a disproportionate influence over the content and direction of the annual Aids conferences. Last week, rage and hatred permeated almost every session as Act Up!, a militant USbased group, made clear its demands and questioned the motives of almost everybody else involved. Aids has always been a political disease, but now the politics more closely resemble paranoia. The ome Foundation makes one of the few effective drugs available for Aids sufferers, AZT. Its reward last week for developing and marketing this drug, originally discovered in the United States, was to be vilified by Act Up! as a heartless profiteer. The group called for an end to Wellcome's patent protection and castigated

Helping Aids along

what it called its "callous disregard" for people with Aids. Wellcome was not alone in facing the rage of the activists. Abbott Laboratories, which re-cently pulled out of a clinical trial of a drug called HIVIG that might prevent the transmission of the Aids virus from pregnant women to their children, pleading potential liability claims, had just as bad a time. Even the Terrence Higgins Trust, Britain's home-grown activist group, found itself the object of 1960s-style street theatre as Act Up! lived up to its name by staging noisy protest about advice the trust had given on the likely spread of Aids between lesbians. (Briefly, will, unless carried on in the approved fashion.) What the American activists want, as one of them declared in a session on Aids treatments, are better, safer, cheaper drugs, now. Don't we all? But to make demands like these, responded Professor Anthony Pinching of St Bartholomew's Hospital, was rather like spoilt children demanding sweets on a whim. He also condemned the "cheap and unworthy" attacks on individuals made at the conference.

His admirable address was in sharp contrast with the woebegone response of American scientists, who are reluctant to stand up to the activists, and have even adopted the same politically-correct language. Thus homosexuals are now "men who have sex with men", prostitutes "female sex workers" and their pimps "nonpaying partners".

The truth about Aids, in the West at least, is that it is a disease easily avoided by changes in behaviour. Many of the HIVpositive activists who were in Amsterdam are infected because they ignored advice. They deserve sympathy and the best of care, but we need not listen open-mouthed to the advice they give others about the right way to behave.

The greatest danger posed by the sound and fury is that it will replace the open-minded search for the truth about Aids and HIV with the easy certainties of activist politics. Already the various self-help groups offer advice about which drugs are best. Such advice may seem harmless enough, but it makes proper clinical trials of new drugs increasingly difficult, because HIV-positive people are being constantly urged by their peers to try something different, or to mix-and-match from drugs and fringe medicines on the market. Direct comparisons between AZT and new drugs, such as Bristol-Myers Squibb's promising Stavudine, are becoming difficult because patients in the US will not continue taking the drug for long enough to discover if it is effective. Bombarded with advice from all sides and told that drug companies are profiteers, they make their own decisions about their therapy. Compliance suffers, and the trials become less effective in sorting gold from dross. The demand for absolute safety puts another giant hurdle in the drug companies way. Abbott may have had other reasons for pulling out of the HIVIG trial, as some scientists believe, but the issue of liability is a serious one. Anybody injured by taking the drug would undoubtedly be urged by the activists to sue the company for every penny it has. These are, of course, the very same activists who are calling for accelerated access to new drugs. The frustration of Aids sufferers is understandable. Ten years after the disease emerged, we know a great deal more about it but are little better equipped to deal with it. HIV is a virus of infinite resource, adept at disguise and subtle in its operations. The only consolation is that it is difficult

But when frustration turns to anger, as it did in Amsterdam, the whole fragile enterprise of research is threatened. The hope of the Aids conferences was to forge a new alliance between patients and therapists, from which both could benefit. Last week's experience suggests that this experiment has failed, and if the Aids conferences are to have any future, they will need to be reconstructed along more traditional lines.

Like talking to a machine

Il the great domestic inventions of modern times, beginning with the telephone, have the same drawback, invariably unnoticed until it is too late. It is the dependence that the machine demands of us; and the demand is made at the most vulnerable spot. Let me give you two trivial examples of what I mean. Not long ago, I went into a large, smart efficient bookshop; I knew what I wanted and where to find it, and in a minute or two I was approaching the cash register. The assistant took the book. checked the price on the back cover, and plied the keyboard of the very handsome electronic till.

Nothing happened. She tried again, with a similar result. She tried a third time: third time was also unlucky. She apologised, and asked me to go to one of the other tills. I did, with exactly the same result. I looked round the shop and realised what had happened; the cash registers were identically interlinked: one out, all out, as the dockers used to say. But then the dependence showed itself. There was no manual means of opening the tills except to smash them. I left, in search of a very slightly less up-to-date bookshop.

The other instance took place in theatre. When the hugely successful musical Les Misérables opened in Manchester, the first night was brought to a halt in mid-performance when a massive section of the scenery, electrically operated, would not move into its place. For reasons of safety, it could not be left where it was. Very well, people like me would say; get the brawnyarmed stage hands to push it into its allotted position. The piece of scenery could not be moved by hand. The performance had to be abandoned (Les Dawson cried "Well, at least tell us how it ends!"), and everybody went home.

Romantics like me would prefer displaced machines to be kept safely until the new ones break down, but of course it is impossible. That is what I meant by our dependence on machines: the telephone is everywhere, but if it is Bernard Levin falls foul of an inhuman force in his home There was another inadequacy so absurd that, again, I could not vandalised we are helpless. Worse: in the United States some sections of the telephone service (presumably it will be the whole of it in due course) are worked entirely by recorded instructions; if you want guidance over and above those. vou will find that no human being is available.

Which brings me to what may be the sole truly user-friendly modern machine (the computer certainly isn't). I have installed a fax, an Amstrad, to which I have given the name Charlie, and I pat Charlie on the head every time I pass him. Charlie works perfectly. he has a delightfully sunny temperament - he whistles while he works, for a start — but alas, there is what I believe is called the 'downside" to consider.

I bought Charlie because he was not only a fax, but a telephone answering machine as well, and I must now ask Mr Alan Sugar, the hugely successful boss of Amstrad. what brand of that ancillary he uses, for surely it can't be his own. Indeed. Charlie's excellence only emphasises the lamentable inadequacy of his Siamese twin, the Amstrad answering machine.

To start with, the time allotted for the outgoing message, or OGM for short, is eleven seconds. Please stop what you are doing and say clearly: "This is one, two, three - six, seven, eight, nine; I am sorry that no one can answer your call at the moment, but if you will leave a message after you hear the bleep, your call will be returned as soon as possible. Alternatively, you could send me a fax, on three, four, five - six, seven, eight, nine. Thank you.'

That took 18 seconds, and I was speaking clearly but not slowly; even if I gabble the words so that they are unintelligible it cannot be done inside 14 seconds. I went through the booklet of instructions to discover how I might change the length of the OGM: I could not helieve that the 11 seconds' ration was immovable. But it is.

You haven't heard the half of it. Next came the microphone into which the OGM is recorded. This. I thought, was a joke. Would that it were. I had to lie on the floor and shout - shout - into a tiny pinhole sited under the edge of the machine, while gabbling unintelligibly to cram my OGM into II seconds. But however loud your voice in the recording, a caller is likely to hear only a feeble rendition: more than one of my friends rang me to say (they didn't know of the irony). "Your telephone message is worn out, you should rerecord it."

believe it, and searched the instructions, convinced that I had misunderstood them. Not so: no caller, wanting to leave a message, can speak for more than one minute; when the minute is used, the caller is immediately cut off. (Again, I sought for the means of changing that ludicrous and in-hospitable diktat. I sought in vain; there is no way of permitting a caller to speak for more than 60

But now for the crowning glory. programmed the miserable anering machine to cut in with the OGM after four double-rings; it obeys. But if I am in a room other than the one in which the machine sits, and I pick up one of the other handsets, wanting to take the call instead of leaving it to the answering machine, it cuts in anyway, and my caller and I are trying (unsuccessfully) to hear each other over the OGM.

This time I was baffled entirely; it was so grotesque that it must have been a mistake on my part or something damaged in the machine. I rang the supplier (Dixon's, a reputable store), and explained. What was I doing instead? After a time, the answer came: you are doing nothing wrong, but this inevitably happens, and there is no way to

Caveat emptor. It was my own fault that I failed to ask enough vital questions (though you must admit that nobody could have imagined that last item), and I am not asking for my money back. I have bought an excellent answering machine, a BT make, and I have abandoned the fax answerphone entirely. And Charlie behaves impeccably.

But my question stands. I promise Mr Sugar the most rigorous confidence if he will tell me what brand of fax-answerphone he uses. Panasonic? Toshiba? Canon? BT? Ah, I've got it! He doesn't use the telephone at all, but does everything by fax. I must tell Charlie to look out for an apology.

"Well really." I thought, "no-body's coming today. What is the point of carrying these berries inside, laying the table, getting dressed for breakfast and causing unnecessary laundry and washing-up? I'll eat the fruit here on the grass in my underpants. No need either," I thought, "to collect a panful before eating. Why not pull the berries off the bushes and put them straight into my mouth?"

I did so, at first inspecting an open-necked shirt. Lawrence, already in "dark flannel jacket and dark tie", walks with him. On return, the Australian is begged by his wife to don coat, collar and tie. Lawrence comments that Frieda "really disapproved of casual wear at breakfast. That is all he says about breakfast, thought there is a good deal more about sex.

For breakfast on Friday in Derbyshire, I was wearing only a pair of old boxer shorts with the elastic gone. It was sunny and I was abone and looking out across a valley Lawrence knew well. The fridge was empty, and it was about 10am. "Not worth bothering." I thought. "Let's call it lunch." There was half a packet of flour in the cupboard. and my gooseberry and blackcurrant bushes were laden with ripe fruit. "I'll make a goose, berry and blackcurrant crumble," I thought, an ambitions idea and one which, on starting the search for ingredients. much trouble thereby. struck me as not being worth the bother: after all, it was only me.

The blackcurrants, too, I frequently tested for

I did so, at first inspecting each berry for bits of stalk or

With the blackcurrants I found you could eat a whole cluster, including the skeleton of green stalks on which it hung, after-wards spitting out what you could of the stalks, and saving

I was now on hands and Frankly, I was grazing. In the adjacent field some cows were doing the same, their munching interrupted by the occasional scuffle as one lady cow tried to mount another. Lawrence would have made a great deal of this: two chapters at least. I confined myself to remarking that the incidence of lesbianism among today's cows is alarming. blamed the growth hormones.

Near where I grazed I spotted the neat ball of bones and fluff

I ever saw, almost dachshund-sized, carrying a fledgling bird in its mouth. The weasel glanced at me, a big vegetarian in boxer shorts, and walked on, no doubt amused. I glanced at the cows, even bigger vegetarians without boxer shorts. I swatted from my ankle one of those tiny red spiders that nip. I returned to my berries, the cows to their grass, the weasel to its bird. All around, munching filled the air. All dressed up for their breakfast, Mr and Mrs Lawrence can say what they like about sex. All undressed for mine, I concluded, with the late spider, mouse and fledgling, and with the owl, weasel, cows, gooseberries and Woody Allen, that life is mostly

Women who won't

AS THE BBC comes under pressure from within to choose a woman to deliver the annual Reith lecture, two prime contenders for the honour have ruled themselves out. Speculation has centred on A.S. Byatt, the novelist, who is hard at work in France on her latest work. Byatt says she is in the wrong psychological state for the task. "Even if I was available, I would have a mixed view. I am sick of being asked to do things just because I am a woman. There are numerous women in Britain more than capable of delivering the lectures. All the major chairs in English literature at Cambridge University are held by women."

Anne Winder, BBC Radio's head of features, arts and education, is leading the campaign for a woman to deliver the lecture. She says it is "shocking" that only one woman has delivered the lecture in 44 years. Dame Margery Perham, the historian, in 1961. The name of Dorothy Hodgkin, winner of the 1964 Nobel prize for chemistry, has also been put forward. But Hodgkin, 82, says she would have liked to have been asked when she was younger. "I am not fit enough to handle it now. It is sensible to have more women. There are many other well qualified younger women who could and should be asked."

 As a local government dinner trawled through the finer points of municipal finance, Lady Young, who was listening to a speech by her husband, the housing minister, caused some alarm by grabbing a knife and digging at her left wrist. "The colour drained from my neighbours' faces as they contemplated the despair to which they had driven me." she said afterwards with relish. In fact she was adjusting the strap on her wristwatch.

The ambassador, his wife Sarah and their two sons. Duncan and Thomas, joined the Shabbat congregation at the St John's Wood synagogue. None other than Dr Jonathan Sacks, the Chief Rabbi, was there to greet them. The synagogue had clearly done some homework. The elders discovered that the new ambassador is a direct descendant of Robert Burns. A translation of the poet's version of the 70th psalm was read to a packed congregation, and Burns assured his hosts he would not miss the traditional Burns festivities in Israel. Scottish expatriates in Tel Aviv, it appears, celebrate the occasion with kosher haggis.

between the latest Iraqi confrontation and that which led to war last year, the most significant is the tangible lack of enthusiasm in the Arab world for renewed Americaned military action against President Saddam Hussein.

The embarrassed official silence in many Arab capitals, and the vocal opposition on the streets — even from those who supported an Arab role in the Gulf war — is in stark contrast to the alacrity with which Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria steampollered an anti-Iraq majority through the Arab League in August 1990. Iraq defiance undermines Bush election campaign

From Jamie Dettmer in Washington

BAGHDAD'S defiance has met with firmness or the UN been a serious embarrassment to an American president who had hoped to use the liberation of Kuwait as the ticket for a second term to the White

For the gung-ho in middle America it may appear simple. Just bomb Iraq, unleash those rockets and Tomahawk missiles that will bring President Saddam Hussein to heel.

But the question Bush administration officials are grappling with now is, what happens if the Iraqi dicatator emerges from the rubble and is still defiant? In other words. what would constitute victory in another military confrontation with Irag?

Should the White House be content with just forcing the Iraqis into opening the doors of the agriculture ministry in Baghdad to United Nations inspectors? How will it look if, after bombing raids. Saddam continues to be difficult with the UN and maintains his in the south?

The risks are high politically for President Bush. Middle America may not like Saddam, but will it punish the president in the November election if body-bags containing American airmen start arriving back home?

The margin of error for Mr Bush is not wide. Two opinion polls published yesterday continued to show that Bill Clinton, the Democratic presidential candidate, has a commanding two-to-one lead over Mr Bush. The infighting that broke out among Republicans last week over the future of Dan Quayle, the vice-president, did little to project the impression of an administration in control. On Friday, White House aides let it be known that Mr Bush assured the vice-president at a private meeting that he would not be dropped as running mate. But the knives are still out for Mr Quayle and Republican senators are urging his removal from the Republican ticket. The administration is agreed on one thing in the current standoff with Iraq. Some form of action has to be taken. The defiance has to be will be critically undermined and the president will look

Beyond that, a debate is still raging in Washington about war aims, about the scope of military action and about the breadth of international support that is necessary before the Tomahawks can streak across the Gulf. General Colin Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, urged the president at a meeting on Saturday at Camp David, Maryland, to be clear about the objectives of any military action, according to Pentagon

As a military planner, General Powell has always insisted on clear aims and of being able to marshal forces to handle any contingency. According to Pentagon sources, there are plenty of wortying military unknowns.

Iraq has re-built its air defence system. How effective is it now? The Iraqi air force has been flying training and attack missions in south Iraq over the past few days and its pilots may be in reasonably good combat shape. The Pentagon is also keen to have more precise figures on how many Scud missiles Iraq still has. Would Saddam try again to garner Arab support by launching Scud attacks against Israel?

Most of the participants at the Camp David meeting on Saturday argued that the aims of any action would have to be broader than forcing traq into allowing inspectors into the agriculture ministry. At the very least it should be designed to force the Iraqi dictator to agree to stop all physical intimidation of UN inspectors and other efforts by Baghdad to frustrate UN missions.

But if the administration does decide to present a list of demands to Iraq and opts for a broad range of military op-tions, it could face problems in gaining international support and risks Democrat opposition. Mr Clinton will endorse action only if it has UN support.

Although tension between Baghdad and the United Nations seemed to subside when Iraq agreed yesterday to allow non-coalition inspectors to review its weapons programme. there was concern in Israel that it could again be subjected to tragi missile strikes if Britain, France and America resume aerial bombardment of Iraqi installations.

However, Israeli military sources and defence experts said yesterday that the circumstances that enabled Baghdad to fire 39 Scuds at Israel 18 months ago have changed considerably and that this time Israel would not hesitate to retaliate on a large scale. ISRAEL and Syria yesterday reacted favourably to the pro-posal by James Baker, the American Secretary of State, that the Middle East peace talks should resume in Washington on August 10, a month earlier than expected.

In Damascus, Farouq al-Sharaa, the Syrian foreign minister, said: "We welcome the resumption of bilateral peace talks as soon as possible. We will respond positively when we receive the invita-tion." Lebanon and the joint Jordanian-Palestinian delega-tion did not respond officially, although they are not expected to have any objections.

In Jerusalem, Moshe Shachal, the police minister, said: "We certainly intend to answer the invitation and stick to the schedule." However, officials said that Yitzhak Rabin.

Israel has made it clear it wants to give new impetus to the stalled talks by discussing issues of substance, in particular an autonomy plan for the 1.8 million Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip: Washington is thought to wish to see some progress in the nine-month discussions in before the presidential elec-

Reagan may face conspiracy charge over Iran-Contra deal

FROM JAMIE DETIMER

SPECIAL prosecutors investigating the Iran-Contra affair may start legal moves in the next ten days that could lead to the indictment of Ronald Reagan for conspiracy. Shultz has told his family that he fears he will be indicted.

The Weinberger notes record the debates about American shipments to Tehran in 1985 and 1986 of 508 anti-tank missiles and in November 1985 of Hawk antiaircraft missiles. Shortly after the anti-tank missiles were received in Iran. Benjamin Weir, one of the five American hostages held by pro Iranian groups in Lebanon, was released.

In the notes, unearthed by prosecutors in the Congress library last November, Mr Weinberger mentions several times that he warned Mr Reagan and Donald McFarlane, then White House national security adviser, of the possible illegal nature of the shipments.

Any moves against Mr Reagan are likely to provoke fiercer protests than when charges' were announced against Mr Weinberger. He received widespread sympathy since he was the only Reagan administration official who opposed the secret deals with Iran and disapproved of using the proceeds to help supply the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

The only certain fact about the dramatic escape last Wednesday of the country's most notorious drug trafficker and nine of his henchmen from their luxury prison near Medellin, is that it has plunged the country's govemment back into an agony of fear and self-doubt. This proves what everyone suspected," a senior Bogota businessman said. "The drug traffickers are the real power in Colombia. They do exactly

Car makers throw cash into battle for K-registration sales

By Kevin Eason, motoring correspondent

CAR makers could lose hunreds of pounds on every car they sell in August as they throw all their resources into forging a revival from recession in the biggest sales month of the year.

Secret industry figures show that some manufactors: ers are investing as much as £450 per car on advertising and finance deals to ensure that they secure sales in what is now being seen as the most crucial month for the impretry in three years.

Sales in the first half of this year are down more than four per cent on 1991, which saw the worst slamp since the second world war. August could provide the signal that the industry is about to rise from the bottom of the recession if British buyers maintain their obsession with owning a car which spons the new year registranon letter.

Ministers will be watching the August sales figures for signs that buyers are regaining confidence by taking money out of savings acback into the high street to

Zoo rescue plans fail to meet losses

By NIGEL HAWKES SCIENCE POTTOR

LONDON Zoo faces a crucial meeting on Wednesday with no solution in sight for its financial problems and closure still the likeliest option. No rescue plans so far proposed can meet the ex-pected loss of at least £1 million a year, Sir Barry Cross, the Zoological Society's secretary, has said. The zoo has been insolvent for at least 20 years. Recently we have looked at at least a dozen plans, in-volving reductions in costs, staff, or species. None has so far produced a viable op-tion that would keep us open for more than another six to 18 months". On Wednesday, the fellows of the society will vote on a motion proposed by a reform group calling for the resignation of all those responsible for the running of the society and the zoo. If passed, the resolution will inge the 200 into an even deeper crisis. Sir Barry believes it is unconstitutional and could not be implemented without a ballot of all fellows and consultation with the Charity Commis-

The 200, he says, needs a £20 million endowment to provide the income needed to meet the annual losses. Of the £10 million given by the government in 1988 as Whipsnade, and £2.2 miliion on capital investment. The fellows voting on Wednesday provide only 1 per cent of its income through their subscriptions. Visitors pay £8.1 million a year, covering only 87 per cent of costs.

"No other national zoo in a capital city comes close to our performance," Sir Barry says. "Most are subsidised by anything between 20 and 80 per cent of costs."

The zoo also faces £15 million in backlog maintenance, including the aquarium. About £7 million is needed to repair the Mappin Terraces. E6 million for other buildings, and up to £2 million for offices and laboratories.

Diabetics 'misled' by dietary claims

DIABETICS are being cynically misled by food companies into spending E15 million a year on special foods that are unnecessary and have no nutritional advantages, a report published yesterday claims.

The criticism from the Food Commission, an independent consumer group, was supported by the British Diabetic Association, which said that it did not recommend specialised foods. Boots, a leading maker of diabetic foods, said that the commission's report was misleading and inaccurate. The commission's Food Magazine analysed foods inbiscuits, sponge cake, orange squash and chocolate. All scored badly on grounds of health and cost. "We found no 'diabetic' product that could offer either better nutrition or a lower price than others on the supermarket shelf," it said. Special foods could cost up to four times as

TOXIC food additives are still in use, three years after the government announced that t would ban them. The agriculture ministry said in February 1989 that it intended to prohibit the use of mineral hydrocarbons, such as paraffin oil and vaseline, as additives or in food processing "as soon as possible", on the advice of the health department's committee on toxicity. The ministry admitted at the weekend that it had postponed any action after receiving data from the petrochemical industry.

In 1989 the committee recommended unequivocally that mineral oils should be reclassified as substances of definite or probable toxicity", even at low doses, and should not be permitted in food. The amounts of the oils consumed in Britain were "in excess of even any tentative acceptable daily intake", it

Mineral oils are used, among other things, to stop dried fruit from sticking together, to replace the natural wax coating lost in washing citrus fruit, to glaze confectionery and to lubricate machinery used in processing bread, jellies and sausages The baking industry is estimated to use 44,000 litres of white oil a day to grease baking tins and cutting blades. Residues of the oils remain in the bread. The ministry's ban exempted only cheese rind and chewing

The ministry emphasised that there was no evidence that the substances had produced adverse effects in humans. The toxicity committee's recommendation was based on experiments on animals that indicated potential carcinogenicity.

The problem is that oily fish is not just the richest source of these unique Omega-3 fatty acids, it's virtually the only source.

To compound the problem, the most popular fish with British households - cod, haddock, and plaice - are all poor providers of these protective oils. What we should be eating is more mackerel, herring, and tuna, or salmon, pilchards and spiny dogfish.

For example, the Eskimos and Japanese eat lots of oily fish and it is thought that this is one of the main reasons why their history of heart maintenance is much better than ours.

"The airport trip is far too dangerous and the road is too busy with food coming in to the city." Mr Kessler said. Flying people out is extreme ly hazardous with all the artillery on the hillside. French planes have been shot at." An Austrian plane was recently turned back in mid-air after attempting to land at Sarajevo airport without permission.

Thousands of children have been evacuated overland and a few are still being taken out in convoys on the road to Split. But so far only one baby has been flown out. "Our concern is to bring in staff to work with the people on the ground." said Mr Kessler. "There are 400,000 people here and if there is no resolution to the war they could all be on the road this winter."

Further details emerged yes-terday of the stranded aid

convoy that failed to reach Gorazde in the north. Two vehicles hit landmines and the convoy of aid and reconnaissance workers, including Sir Donald Acheson, the British officer, was forced to spend the night by the road.

Although the first vehicle in the convoy, driven by the Serb escort, was untouched, Mik Magnusson, spokesman for the UN peacekeeping force, said the incident was not an ambush. "It's difficult to confirm there was an evil attempt to drive into an ambush. although the way the incident ocurred was typical of an ambush."

About 40 German volunteers early yesterday went to Freilassing, on the Austrian border, where six mercy trains from Bosnia stopped briefly on their way to their destinations around Germany. The volunteers handed out food and a medical team stood by to offer help if needed. One of those on the platform was Hans Pallaske, a Red Cross doctor who had also gone to meet the trains arriving three years ago with refugees from East Germany. "It was a completely different mood then." he said. "There was no war in East Germany and they were jubilant at reaching the West. Many [of the present refugees have lost loved ones in a terrible conflict. They have no future and hate to think

IN ROME

A SMILING but visibly pale and thinner Pope appeared briefly in public yesterday for the first time since he underwent surgery to remove his gall bladder and a benign intestinal tumour.

Wearing his customary white papal cassock, he appeared for about a minute at the window of his 10th-floor suite at Rome's Genelli hostical has been for pital, where he has been for two weeks. The 72-year-old pontiff smiled and waved at ell-wishers in the courtyard below. He blessed them be-

We walked out of the Bosnian army headquarters in the centre of town where her father is based. It was a Saturday afternoon but the streets were eerily descried. Here the wreckage of war is everywhere: shops with their fronts blown out, twisted remains of cars litter the road and everywhere building facades are pitted with shell and bullet holes. And ebbing and flowing in the background as ever, the "Sarajevo symphony" played out daily by an orchestra of rifles, mortars and

For half a mile or so we walked down the city's main street named after Marshal Tito. Amra and her 18-yearold sister Elma ambled along quite casually but my stomach was clenched with tension. After just a few days here you develop a sixth sense for danger and we were exposed.

From there, hearts pounding, we trekked up a steep hill into the warren of the old city. We tramped across gardens, up dusty alleys until finally we were home. As we went further into the relative safety of old Sarajevo, where children played in the streets, the tension began to drain away. Black-haired and fineboned, Amra, 24, was a law student and Communist party member before the war. She looks like a model and carries a pistol in her handbag. "I went to Belgrade for volunteer labour," she said. "I loved Tito for 20 years. It was a good war and we believed in some-

HOLLAND, with some of Europe's worst traffic problems, has bred a new phobia called traffic jam angst. An increasing number of Dutch drivers are becoming immobilised by a fear of motorway tailbacks. Driving Holland's congested roads is stressful enough at the best of times, but motorists come under extra pressure in motorway traffic jams, according to Jaap Nap, an extraffic policeman who runs a course to cure driving-related phobias. Holland's 5.5 milion cars contributed to 7,312 miles of tailbacks last year.

Delivery van drivers or business executives heading for a meeting are particularly vulnerable. With a deadline to meet, the prospect of watching the minutes tick away in still standing traffic provokes a terrible panic. Some motorists suffer palpitations, hyperventilation, bouts of nausea or even blackouts. Others become "champions of the B roads", driven by a compul-sion to out-do their fellow motorist.

The phobia, however, can be transferred to other areas of a driver's life, mining a marriage or a career as the victim cannot control his or her aggression. About 60 per cent of the sufferers are women.

About 70 per cent of the latest batch of 130 motorists treated by Mr Nap's company, Top Level Drivers, did not dare drive on motorways. Others were frightened of travelling over bridges or through tunnels, or had been traumatised by having seen a road accident. "One woman developed a

Rome airlifts elite Jam phobia troops into Sicily FROM JOHN PHILLIPS IN ROME

MORE than 1,000 Italian

paratroopers and other elite forces were deployed in Sicily yesterday to reinforce police on the island as the government revived Mussolini-era tactics against the Mafia. More than 400 conscripts from the Friuli motorised regiment arrived at Palermo's Punta Raisi airport yesterday. the defence ministry said. On Saturday a comingent of 615 red beret paratroopers from the Folgore regiment that distinguished itself during peacekeeping operations in Lebanon and Kurdistan arrived in the Sicilian capital.

The government decided on Saturday to send a total of 7,000 troops to Sicily by Wednesday following the assassinations on May 23 and July 19 of Giovanni Falcone and Paolo Borsellino, the anti-

Mafia judges.
Soldiers wearing steel hel-mets were deployed guarding prisons and courthouses in Palermo and other cities on the island yesterday. General Goffredo Canino, the army chief of staff, reassured anxious relatives of the soldiers that they would not have to take any mnecessary risks.

The soldiers have the status of special constables taking over routine duties to allow specialised police and carabinieri to concentrate on the hunt for underworld bosses on the run. The troops cannot initiate investigations and are not empowered to make formal arrests.

"The state attack has started," said Claudio Martelli, the justice minister. "This is not just muscle flexing. The armed forces will take part in searches in the hunt for wantcriminals, arms and explosives." Newspapers compared the operation with the strategy used by Mussolini, who sent troops to the island in 1924 under the command of Cesari Mori, the "Iron Prefect". Mussolini made Mori a senator and pensioned him off in 1929, claiming the Mafia had been defeated. Most Italian historians believe the dictator gave up the light when Mori's investigations disclosed the links between organised crime and the gov-

Employing the army against a secret enemy of this kind is not

Alfredo Morvillo, Falcone's brother in law, who is also a judge and one of eight Palermo magistrates who resigned last week in protest over lack of protection said: The choice of the army is laughable.

However, the arrival of the paratroopers was welcomed by Antonino Caponetto, the veteran anti-Mafia judge who organised a "pool" of magis-trates including Falcone and Borsellino that successfully waged war against Cosa Nostra in the 1980s. "A month ago I said the army should be called in but everyone criticised me." Signor Caponetto said.

Investigators meanwhile said they suspected Borsellino was killed in connection with enquiries the judge was carrying out on links between Mafia activities in the Sicilian city of Agrigento and Mafiosi active in Germany.

A LEADING South African pathologist, who says his appeals to President de Klerk have been fruitless, claimed at the weekend that the killing of prisoners in police custody is continuing unabated and that he conducts post-mortem examinations on victims of police brutality at a rate of one

"I can stand it no longer." said Dr Jonathan Ghickman in an interview with the Johannesburg Sunday Times. South Africa's biggest-selling newspaper. "I have constant evidence of police handling people in a vicious manner. My impression is that they are totally out of control. They do what they like."

His conclusion from deal-ing with senior police officers government ministers was that they did not know what was going on. In his office in Johannesburg he has more than 200 files of post mortems he has performed on people who have died in custody. This is the fruit, or detritus, of a lifetime. Ninety per cent of the people in these files. I am convinced, were killed by the police," he said. Hernus Kriel, minister of and order, told the

A pathologist says deaths in police custody continue unabated, writes Ray Kennedy from

Johannesburg newspaper yesterday that he had ordered a report to be made to him in the next two weeks on every death in detention during the past two years. He said he would then respond in full to Dr Gluckman. The pathologist gave evidence for the family of Steve Biko at

sciousness leader who died from brain damage in 1977 while in the hands of the security police. Although there was evidence that he was viciously beaten and driven naked and manacled 600 miles on a freezing winter's night from the coastal city of Port Eliza-beth to Pretoria, the inquest magistrate found that nobody was criminally responsible for his death. Dr Gluckman said that he wrote to Mr de Klerk last November drawing his

Dr Gluckman's decision to go public follows the death of Simon Mthimkulu, 19, whose body was found in the veld 12 hours after he was detained by police in Sebokeng township, south of Johannesburg, on July 14. A post-mortem examination was carried out last week and, according to Dr Gluckman, the findings were wholly consistent with statements by witnesses to lawyers that the boy was brutally

Meanwhile, police mounted high-profile show of force throughout South Africa on Saturday as the African Nat-ional Congress held a series of protest marches. But the ANC's hopes of mass action leading up to the two-day general strike it has called for next week resulted in mass apathy. Fewer than 50,000 people took part in the KING Goodwill Zwelithini of the Zulus, 44. took a teenage Xhosa speaking girl as his fifth wife here at the weekend in a ceremony with political overtones, since the Zulus are heavily at odds with the mainly Xhosa African National Congress.

But Chief Mangosuthu
Buthelezi, chief minister of KwaZulu, the Zulu homeland, and leader of the mainly Zulu Inkatha Freedom party, tried to spoil this image, insisting that Nompu-melelo Mchiza, 19, the bride, was not a Xhosa but a member of the Bhaca tribe which was cut off from the main body of the Zulu nation by colonial boundaries.

The big song about the king marrying what some in the media described as a Xhosa bride is the biggest nonsense we have read in the media for a long time," he said. "Some have gone further to make this marriage a kind of political alliance between Zulus and Xhosas. It is

AND THE TURKISH GOVERNMENT IS STILL BURYING IT.

'THE HIDDEN HOLOCAUST': In 1915, the Turkish government ordered the deportation of Armenians to the deserts of Syria and other regions. On the marches there, many died of disease, exhaustion or hunger. Others also tell of rape, murder and slavery. But an even worse fate awaited the survivors. Thousands of men, women and children were crammed into the caves of Deir ez-Zor and burned alive.

From 1915-1918, at least 11/2 million Armenians were exterminated.

To this day Turkish governments have refused to recognise that the genocide occurred. Tonight, Secret History again uncovers the truth about a shocking event that, over time, has been obscured by a welter of hearsay and propaganda.

This evening's programme looks at the evidence of the holocaust and the aftermath of cover-up and denial.

A LAST-MINUTE settlement of a two-month strike by black employees of the South African Broadcasting Corporation enabled millions of people to view their country's return to the Olympic Games and the impressive opening ceremony in Barcelona.

There has been no indication whether any invitation was extended to President de Klerk, who visited Spain last month. Meanwhile, there have been reports that South Africa's hard-won athletics unity, which eventually enabled it to take part in the Games, might disintegrate when the athletes return home. They are calling for the executive of the national Olympic committee, which is self-appointed, to be elected. The athletes also accuse officials of blundering administration and of tokenism in the selection of Cheryl Roberts, a black table tennis player, rather than Surita Odendaal, a white woman who is regarded as the country best female player. .

Police arrest 70 as revellers are barred from illegal festival

SEVENTY people were arrested yesterday for drug and traffic offences as police cordoned off an illegal festival on a hillside in west Wales. Officers sealed the site at Kerry, near Newtown, Powys, to prevent hundreds of revellers Castle Donington, near Leicester, from joining 10,000 "new age" travellers.

Residents and police were concerned yesterday that the festival would become a rerun of the rave last May in Castlemorton, 60 miles away near Malvern in Worcester when more than 20,000 travellers converged after being moved on several times by police across county borders. Teacher stabbed at university

By Jenny Knight

AN OPEN University tutor was found stabbed to death on the University of York campus on Saturday night. hours after arriving to teach a week-long course.

Elizabeth Howe, 34, of Oxford, was found in a room at the Wentworth College hall of residence. A search had been made of the campus after she failed to attend a briefing for the 100 tutors on Saturday afternoon. No weapon had been found last night.

Dr Howe was married with two daughters, aged six and four. Her body was identified by her husband, Jeremy, head of plays at BBC Radio 3. Dr Howe was to have tu-tored in English literature as part of the Open University summer school, attended by 800 students. The Open University said that she did several part-time teaching jobs and was thought to be attending her first summer "The whole OU community will be deeply shocked," a spokesman said. "We want to express our sympathy to Dr Howe's family and friends. Although the academic programme at the school will go ahead, students and staff who feel unable to continue are being allowed to return

One of Dr Howe's neighbours in Oxford, Kathleen Malone, 68, said: They are a lovely family. They were very happy and she had two won-derful children. This is absolutely terrible. My heart goes out to her husband and children."

Last night police were ques tioning a student who had also arrived on Saurday for summer school. He was arrested on the campus in the early hours of Sunday morning.

talk to all of them. They said they had come because it was a special place. It is special to the cows and sheep that graze there and to me because I have to make a living."

Gareth Vaughan, Mr Pugh's farming neighbour, said: Even if the hippies are moved on they will just travel a couple of miles on down the road on to someone else's land and the problem starts all over again. They have been chopping down trees. pulling up fences, trampling hay and using the fields. streams and rivers as one big toilet. The pollution is terrible. And I'm worried about syringe needles being left on the land."

Police towed a number of vehicles from the site, but until Mr Pugh's injunction comes into effect they are powerless to act further. Gwilym Humphries of the FUW said: "It is quite deplorable that this can take place and farmers can do nothing at all about it.

We feel the police have been a little late in tackling this problem. We support the view of some local politicians who want a tougher policy against such convoys. The same tactics that were used against the miners during the big strike - stopping them travelling before the trouble starts — should be employed."
Farmers and landowners in north and mid Wales set up a "hippy-watch" scheme to give advance warning of travellers approaching, to en-able gates to be barred. Others acted to prevent an overspill from Kerry onto nearby common land. Tonnes of cowdung were spread over one potential settlement. Other farmers blockaded land with farm machinery.

The hippies offered sympathy and cash to the farmers last night. One called John said: "We have had a whip round to pay for the dead sheep which were unfortunately killed because some of the dogs got out." from 24.

Most were orphaned when their fathers died in car crashes or were shot by criminals. The visit was arranged by Police Ophans Moscow and the Metropolitan International Exchange Scheme (Pommies). The children, who arrived in London on Friday for the 10-day trip. will visit the zoo and the seaside, tour the Science Museum, go to the theatre and Hamleys toy shop and have a hamburger lunch. A return visit by British police orphans is planned. Pommies was formed in January by officers from the Metropolitan police and from the Moscow militia and a member of Greenwich Police Community Consultative Group.

Channel 4 faces contempt charge over Ulster source

By MELINDA WITISTOCK, MEDIA CORRESPONDENT

THE Director of Public Prosecutions will bring contempt charges against Channel 4 in the High Court today for its refusal to reveal the identity of a source in a documentary alleging links between the security forces and loyalist assassination squads in Northern Ireland.

The channel faces recurring fines and the sequestration of assets if it is found in contempt of court for not handing over documents required by the Prevention of Terrorism Act. It is the first time the act has been used to try to compel journalists to reveal their sources.

The legal action, viewed as a test case, could remove the right of journalists to protect sources in the investigation of matters of grave public interest and concern. Article 19, the human rights group, said that the action was an ominous precedent in efforts to curb media freedom.

Channel 4's budget for the commissioning of further programmes could be jeopardised if heavy, recurring fines are imposed to force it to hand over names and ad-dresses to the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Channel 4 insists that the life of a witness in its Dispatches programme would be in grave danger if his identity were disclosed. The Committee, broadcast on October 2 last year, alleged widespread and systematic collusion between members of the RUC, loyalist terrorists. Protestant community leaders and businessmen, which had resulted in at least 20 sectarian murders in Northern Ireland over the previous two years. The programme's main source was a former member of a secret "committee", who had agreed to be interviewed only if his identity was not revealed.

Before judging on contempt charges, the court must first decide whether it was in the public interest for police orders requiring Channel 4 and Box Productions, the in-dependent producer, to reveal the name to have been granted in the first place. For Channel 4, Gareth Williams, QC, chairman of the Bar Council, and Jonathan Caplan, QC, will argue that it Michael Grade, Channel 4's chief executive, and Sir Richard Attenborough, its chairman, will attend the hearing. Last April, when the contempt charges were brought, Mr Grade said: "If journalists investigating terrorist activity cannot protect their sources, matters of legitimate public concern will become journalistic no-go areas. The Channel 4 board has been placed in the invidious position of having to choose between breaking the law and putting invividuals lives in danger."

The broadcast of The Committee led to an investigation by the RUC. Channel 4 voluntarily handed over an 80-page dossier of material used in making the pro-gramme, including 19 names not covered by the undertakings of anonymity.

Four weeks later, using its powers under the 1989 Prevention of Terrorism Act, the Metropolitan Police Special Branch obtained orders from Judge Clarkson, QC, requiring Channel 4 and Box Productions to hand over further information. Both refused. Last month, David rimble, an Ulster Unionist MP, questioned the motives of Sean McPhilemy, Box Production's executive producer. Mr Trimble told the Commons: "He was a native of Ulster who, in his student days, was associated with extreme republican politics".

Mr McPhilemy said last "The fact that Mr Trimble's only reaction to a programme containing such devastating revelations is to make inaccurate comments about my activities as a student 20 years ago is a sad but eloquent comment on the poverty of political debate."

Defaulters pay phone firm £10m poll tax

By Douglas Broom LOCAL GOVERNMENT CORRESPONDENT

CONTRACTORS who have been employed by councils to telephone poll tax defaulters at home in evenings and at weekends have collected more than £10 million.

Capita, the facilties management group which has contracts with 20 local authorities, says the money has been recovered without resorting to verbal abuse or strong-arm tactics.

Operators are told to be polite and stick to a script agreed with the council. Names and addresses of defaulters are supplied by councils and the company uses computerised dialling ma-chinery. Once connected, the defaulter is reminded of the debt and then offered a range of payment methods including credit cards or instalments. The shock of being phoned at home after working hours appears to encourage many to pay. Even hardened antipoll tax campaigners have been known to be so bowled over by the professional tones of the telephonist that they have reached for their cheque books.

Although the councils which have used the firm are pleased with the results the national situation remains grave. More than £1.5 billion in community charges remain unpaid.

John Jasp chairman of Capita, believes his firm has hit a rich vein and is negotiating with a further 30 councils who want to use the service. Among those already using it are Brent and Westminster in London, Brighton and Old-

London. Brighton and Oldham in Lancashire.
Television licence authorities and the Heart of England Building Society have also used the service to chase licence dodgers and mortgage defaulters. It is run from a service of the servic centre at Theale, Berkshire. which was set up when Capita won the contract to provide computer services to Berkshire County Council.

Coxwain suspended after crew mutinies

By HELEN JOHNSTONE

MUTINY among the crew of the Hastings lifeboat against their coxswain Fred White has resulted in him being suspended from the job pending dismissal. That was the the outcome of a fierce dispute which has been brewing at the East Sussex lifeboat station for some time.

More than half of the st tion's 22-man crew have written to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution (RNLI) complaining about Mr White's "brusque" manner. Some say the power of being captain for the past five years has gone to his head. Mr White, 45, blames the trouble on "poseurs" - a new breed of fifeboatmen he says are nothing more than "pretty boys and whizz kids who only joined up to wear the uniform" He claims he has already been dismissed from the parttime voluntary position. which earns him a retainer of E7 a week after tax. However, Peter Adams, the secretary of the Hastings lifeboat, says Mr White is only suspended. RNLI officials in Poole, Dorset are soon to make a final decision on Mr White's future.Mr White said last night: "I have got a reputation for being a hard man. But I am the one under pressure. I am trying to save peoples' lives and I have got to be in control of my crew. I do swear at the crew. I am probably too tough for most Mr Adams, who was in-pend the coxswain ten days ago, said Mr White's seamanship was superb and many people owed their lives to him. Along with six crewmen, he saved a drowning yachtsman and received an RNLI award for bravery. He has also been presented with a framed letter of appreciation for the calm way in which he dealt with problems. Mr Adams said: "His crew almost as many shops as Dixons and Currys combined, with 850 in the United Kingdom and another three on the Continent. The Cancer Research Campaign, the fastest growing of the charity chains, has quadrupled its number of stores since 1980, opening its 201 st last week and planning another 12 this year.

As more high street shops have become vacant, local authorities and private landlords have in some cases been willing to offer them to charities free or at reduced rents rather than leave them empty. Charities have become more professional in their approach to retailing.

Most still rely on donations of secondhand clothes and bric-a-brac but many offer new goods, advertise widely and hold special promotions. Charity shops do not pay VAT on donated goods and are liable for only 20 per cent of business rates, sometimes waived by local authorities.

Profits are still small, however. Average turnover for most is between £20,000 and £40,000 a shop, according to the report. Notable exceptions are the National Trust and the Notting Hill Trust, a London-based charity for the homeless, which both generate about £100,000 per store. Oxfam, which the report says is the most profitable charity retailer, makes about £20,000 per outlet.

Rory Ellion, manager of the Oxfam store on Kensington High Street, west London, said that competition from other charity shops was making it more difficult to attract shoppers, already depleted because of the recession. "We have had to fight hard for customers in the past

IT IS NOT quite your average seaside concert. In this sylvan setting of Meyrick Park, the audience is encamped on folding chairs and rugs, and equipped with picnic hampers and cold boxes, while the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra at full strength fills the night air with Wagner, Elgar and Puccini. Bournemouth, you have to admit, has style.

It is a style that owes little to history. Unlike its neighbour, Poole, which was by then a iong established port and trading centre, Bournemouth grew from almost nothing in the early years of the nineteenth century — a colony of spacious villas, with trees and landscaped gardens on formerly open heathland.

With its hills and wooded chines, elegant terraces, hotels and smart shops, tennis courts and golf courses, its ubiquitous flower gardens and seven miles of sandy beaches, the town has largely succeeded in maintaining its

The number of visitors last year was five per cent down on 1990, and Ken Male, Bournemouth's tourism director, estimates that there may have been a further 10 per cent fall in the early part of this summer. Three of the larger hotels are in receivership, and others, hard-hit by interest charges and the impact of the uniform business rate, are teetering on the brink of bankruptcy.

"Compared with five years ago, the occupancy figures are terrible," Mr Male admits. But the comparison is partly distorted by the boom which Bournemouth enjoyed in the late 1980s, when hoteliers were encouraged to buy new properties as speculative investments. "The booking pattern has also changed dramatically," he points out. People are leaving everything until the very last mo-ment to decide whether they can afford a holiday. They are also spending much less on extras like meals in restaurants. They will go to one show during their visit, instead of three, and maybe sit on the beach to avoid paying for a deckchair.'

On a glorious July afternoon the beach is crowded with sunbathers and swimmers, the great sweep of the bay from Studland to the distant glimmer of The Needles alive with boats and the colourful sails of windsurfers. "Les is a big attraction of course, and we're playing to quite reasonable houses. On Sunday nights we do the Minstrels, and that's always packed. The old ladies love it." Bournemouth's well-heeled tradition is maintained by the five-star Carlton and Royal Bath hotels. Further down the scale, the Hermitage is one of those in financial trouble.

Tim Scattergood, its assistant manager, recalls that a recent guest brought with him a brochure from 1929, when the room rates were three guineas a week. Now they are £40 a person a night. Luis Candal, the Spanish-

born director of the nearby Bournemouth International Centre, scene of the 1990 Conservative party conference, thinks it is time hotels reassessed their pricing arrangements. "Our international conference business is Heavy rain after a hot spring has caused chemical reactions in silage - cut grass used for animal feed - producing deadly nitrogen dioxide fumes. Regulators want farmers to take safety precautions in their silage processing stores, or clamps.

"If farmers suspect that gas is present, they must ventilate the areas around enclosed clamps by opening all doors the area until they are certain the gas has dispersed."

London psychiatrists 'barely able to cope'

FROM ALISON ROBERTS IN DUBLIN

LONDON psychiatric services are under huge strain because of the increasing numbers of mentally ill people picked up from the streets by police. Psychotic people who travel to London and present themselves at such famous buildings as Buckingham Palace or the Houses of Parliament are often sent to bed and breakfast hotels because hospitals cannot admit them, the Royal College of Psychiatrists' annual conference in Dublin was told yesterday. Andrew Sims, the college's president, said the government's plans to improve the country's mental health will He said that psychiatric specialists were already facing a morale crisis because of the pressures created by NHS reforms, the move towards community care, the Children Act and new therapeutic the six psychiatrists working at the Gordon made emerncy assessments of over 100 patients during the sixmonth period and were barely able to cope. With 28 beds available, many were sent to hostels or hotels and then quickly returned to their ome district. Dr Spence said: "The evidence is that more of these people are coming to London and ending up at a psychiatric hospital that hasn't got the staff or the money. We are the mechanics at the end of it this is a societal problem."

He said that the closure of long-stay institutions was making the situation worse. Up to 40 per cent of homeless people in hostels in the area were schizophrenic.

A Royal College of Psychiatrists' policy document to be published next month will nphasise the enormity of the challenge set by the government's white paper The Health of the Nation.

While Professor Sims welcomed the inclusion of mental health among the government's five central health policy concerns, he said it had "put its head on the block" in setting high targets for the reduction of suicides. He said the government should look more closeat environmental factors behind the high incidence of suicide among young men, a cause for particular worry. Unemployment and what used to be called social deprivation, but is now called variation by our present government, should form a particular target." he said.

A call was also made at the conference for more specialist mother and baby units to deal with high rates of post-natal depression. John Cox. of Keele University, said that at least one mother in ten suffered from some form of mood disorder after giving birth. Yet only one in five health authorities had specialist facilities for post-natal illness and only 10 per cent were able to admit both mother and baby to hospital

Highway Code revised as horseriding accidents rise

A SHARP increase in the number of accidents on the roads involving horses and the deaths of horse and rider has prompted a revision of the Highway Code.

Research is also being conducted to discover the true extent of such accidents. In the past few weeks a 16-vearold girl died after two horses pulling a wedding carriage bolted. A Surrey couple were trapped inside their car after a horse, whose teenage rider died when thrown, landed on the vehicle. In the past two weeks three riders have died.

two of them teenage girls. Peter Joslin, Chief Constable of Warwickshire and traffic chairman of the Association of Chief of Police Officers (Acpo), wants drivers to give more consideration to horses. While accidents involving horses are not reportable, at least 3,000 a year are dealt with by the police. "That is about eight a day and in many of them the horse has to be destroyed." Mr Joslin said. He believes the true figure to be much igher. A study in the British Medical Journal found that 32,000 admissions to hospital casualty departments in a vear came after accidents involving horses. Most were from falls but the second most likely cause was road accidents. While a motorcycle is 12 times more likely to cause death on the road than a horse, a horserider receives an injury for every 350 hours in the saddle while the figure is one in 7,000 hours for motorcycles, the Department of Trade and Industry's consumer safety unit says. More than 3.5 million people ride horses each week and the estimated horse population of more than 300,000 is thought to have increased by 50 per cent in a decade.

Pressure from Acpo, the British Horse Society and the medical profession has prompted the transport department to after its advice to motorists and to those taking animals on the road. The working draft of the revised Highway Code tells motorists to drive more slowly past and to be ready to stop, not to frighten the horses by hooting or revving their engines. Mr Joslin said: "People are still driving very fast past

As the toll of horseriding accidents climbs, the experts suggest some commonsense remedies. Lin Jenkins reports

He said the police believed that horses should be ridden two abreast for safety. They then represented a hazard which had to be overtaken with caution, instead of cars squeezing past too close. Motorists were frustrated at having to wait "but they must realise that if they squeeze past close they could end up with a horse on their bonnet or under the wheels."

Peter Cannon, road safety officer of the British Horse Society, said horses behaved better when ridden abreast. Even when one is being ridden alone the advice is on occasion to take up the road which would be used by a motor vehicle rather than clinging to the gutter. A rider keeping to the far said. His society also advo-cates high visibility and many

taking. "If the horse is ridden further into the road then a vehicle must wait until the road is clear before overtaking. It means that if the horse shies it will not hit the car," he garish horse legbands and tabards are now being worn. Jonathan Cook, an instructor and livery yard proprietor in Surrey, said that many motorists acted dangerously through frustration or ignorance. "Many children who are simply over-cautious or simply unaware are not helpful with their signals. They don't drive and don't realise the dangers. Parents really ought to make sure they are given proper instruction on

The Pony Club and the British Horse Society (BHS) run road safety tests, advising riders to ride on the far left round roundabouts and to turn right from the left-hand side of the road rather than end up along the white line waiting for traffic to stop. All riders would rather not go on the roads but bridleways are scarce. Anne Lee. BHS rights of way officer, said that bridleways were often diverted along a new dual carriageway or bypass to an existing road bridge. New bridleway bridges have 6ft sides. But, a horse-rider, particularly if the horse is misbehaving, still runs the risk of being thrown over the top.

THE NECESSARY BAKER

The Bush campaign is in serious trouble. After a smooth Democratic convention in New York, the Clinton/Gore bus tour through middle America is attracting warm crowds with a message of youth and change. Bill Clinton has a 2:1 lead over the president in opinion polls. The talk of the Republican circuit is the imminent return of James Baker from the State Department to give bite and purpose to the Bush camp, while the rumours that Mr Bush will dump his vicepresident, Dan Quayle, refuse to die. Worst of all for the president, Mr Baker's return is spoken of as indispensable to strengthen the weakest plank in the Republican platform which is George Bush himself.

Yet Michael Dukakis, the Democrat contender in 1988, held a 51:34 lead over Mr Bush at this stage in that campaign. The Republicans always lag in the weeks between the Democrats' party spectacular and their own, which this year is not until August 17 in Houston. But there is no doubting the difference this year. Mr Clinton, who ended alast week confident enough even to criticise Mr Bush's commitment to law and order from the steps of the City Hall in his adopted home base, Houston, has established himself as electable. By contrast the president. fumbling and irascible, has rarely looked less in command of himself or his party than during the past week.

No.

Mr Clinton has lost no time in commenting acidly on the conclusions Americans should draw about the sincerity of Mr Bush's commitment to meeting America's responsibilines in a "new world order", if Mr Bush recalls Mr Baker to the party's service. And America is not just one country among many. In every election year, America's domestic pre-occupations pose some degree of risk to international stability. Mr Baker has proved an extraordinarily effective Secretary of State: and internationally, 1992 is exceptionally turbulent.

Mr Baker's personal influence is critical to momentum in the Middle East, where peace negotiations have just been given a shot in the arm by the Israeli election results. The Balkan expenise of his deputy. Lawrence Eagleburger, might be adequate to handle the widening conflict there, were it not that Mr Eagleburger has never been an integral part of the tightly knit Baker team. But a Ceputy cannot have Mr Baker's authority with the Yeltsin government and with Russia's neighbours at a disturbingly volatile stage in the transformation of the former Soviet Union. And President Saddam Hussein, who is already gambling that the Bush administration is too mesmerised by fears of vote-losing to react forcefully to his renewed defiance of the UN, would be further emboldened by Mr Baker's departure.

Anxious Republican leaders say that while Mr Baker could still, from the White House, keep his hand on the State Department's tiller when it really mattered, he can inject energy into the faltering Bush campaign only by being at the president's side. Working as a team, they believe that Mr Baker could make the most of Mr Bush's foreign policy successes, blunting the Democrass focus on the economic front. But the world's loss might not be Mr Baker's gain. His widely mooted ambition to run for the White House himself could be impeded if Mr Bush lost and a 1992 Bush defeat cannot now be ruled out.

The president might yet try to burnish the ticket by jettisoning Dan Quayle, but only at the risk of seeming to stand neither by ideas nor by men when the going gets tough. With the economy unlikely to pick up convincingly before the election, he can no longer maintain as he did in 1988 that America is on course for renewed growth which would take care of the federal deficit.

However dubious the arithmetic of Mr Clinton's economic programme, therefore, the president needs to come up with a convincing alternative. These are problems of policy, not organisation. Mr Baker can do much for the latter. But only Mr Bush can reinvent his image as an experienced leader and problem-solver. He will not help himself by so obviously needing somebody else to pull his chestnuts from the fire.

TO PROTECT A SOURCE

A case opens before the High Court in London today which could face the management of Channel 4 with a choice between being in contempt of court, or releasing confidential information that could put an informant at risk of his life. The circumstances themselves are worrying enough, but the case also has wider implications for the relationship between the press and the courts. This is clearly a test case of some constitutional importance.

The informant is a potential witness to (and accomplice in) an alleged conspiracy to murder in Northern Ireland. The place, and the nature of the case, bring it within the Prevention of Terrorism Act. The act enables the police to demand disclosure of evidence of terrorist offences. The act allows Channel 4 to plead that disclosure of the identity of the informant to the Royal Ulster Constabulary could on balance do more harm to the public interest than good. Leaving aside the general public interest in journalists protecting their sources - on which the law takes an uneven view - the possible harm in this case is compounded by the nature of the alleged conspiracy which Channel 4's original programme last year, called The Committee, had exposed.

The programmie claimed widespread collusion had taken place between clandestine Protestant paramilitary (ie terrorist) groups, and officers of the RUC, as a result of which some 20 sectarian murders were said to have been committed in the last two years. The illegal liaison was supposedly conducted through a secret "committee", from which the programme took its name. The informant said he was associated with that committee. In return for him telling his story on television, suitably concealed, the Channel 4 programme maker, Box Productions, gave him an absolute promise of anonymity, a promise Channel 4 itself now stands behind. The alleged conspiracy embraces members of the RUC. Part of Channel 4's fear is that the informant's identity, once passed on even in confidence, may leak from the police to paramilitary circles, who may be presumed to be eager to know who has betrayed them in order to kill him. All these are considerations for the two judges of the divisional court to weigh.

The Prevention of Terrorism Act is the sort of illiberal legislation which could only be justified in a civilised society, if at all, by a serious emergency such as war or insurrection. Parliament has deemed that such an emergency exists in Northern Ireland. But MPs could not have intended that an act for the suppression of terrorism in Northern Ireland would force a major domestic television channel into the kind of dilemma which now faces it. Channel 4 may feel it has little honourable alternative but to defy any court order to disclose the information, thus facing punishment for being in contempt of court.

Above all the case points to the absence of any statutory basis for freedom of the press in Britain. This absence has in the past tempted judges to assume that whenever freedom of the press is in collision with some other public good which is specifically enshrined in law, freedom of the press must be the lesser principle (otherwise Parliament would have recognised that too). Though freedom of the press is one of the rights guaranteed by the European Convention on Human Rights, a treaty to which Britain is bound in international law, that does not make good the lack of any statutory safeguard in domestic law.

Much attention has been given in Britain to the case for statutory restrictions on the press in the coverage of scandal. This debate must be balanced by the need for some statutory defence of press freedom, for instance by means of a Freedom of Information Act. That would indicate to judges who have to interpret the public interest that press freedom was not so light a matter that it could be set aside whenever it conflicts with some other public benefit. It is a basic freedom, no less so than the rule of law itself. And an essential part of press freedom must be the right to protect confidential sources in cases such as that before the court today.

A SUNDAY WINNER

The crowds were drawn to yesterday's first Sunday race meeting at Doncaster, but the Jockey Club's brave experiment cannot quite yet be called a success. Two legal obstacles inhibit the development of regular Sunday racing. Courses cannot charge for admission under the Sunday Observance Act of 1780; and on-course betting is barred under the Betting, Garning and Lotteries Act of 1963. Kenneth Clarke, the home secretary, wants to change these laws; but his colleagues, faced already with the necessity of introducing a bill to reform Sunday trading, may hesitate before opening a second front.

They should not. The law is an archaism. It has a whiff of those twin British vices, class and hypocrisy. Upper-class England will desert its duties these coming weekdays for the glories of Goodwood. Come next Sunday, the rest of the nation will be denied the chance of a family day out at the races. Upper-class England had no difficulty placing a bet yesterday, since the law permits Sunday wagering to those sufficiently wellheeled to maintain a credit account. But by law, the rest of England could not bet oncourse, where cash bening is not permitted.

By law, all bening shops were closed.

No other god-fearing racing nation rules out Sunday racing. It flourishes in France; indeed, half the crowd at the Prix de L'Arc de Trìomphe at Longchamp in October are Englishmen, denied their favourize recreation nearer home. Ireland began Sunday racing in 1985 with six meetings. Now 26 meetings are held; and they attract the biggest crowds of the week.

Once there was at least some justification for the law, in that other sports were also barred on Sunday. That too has changed. Cricket began the Sunday league in 1969. Test matches are now played - and sometimes even won! — on Sundays. Top league football; Grand Prix motor racing: Open golf and Wimbledon finals: all are held on Sundays. There seems no reason why the Sport of Kings (and of the Queen) should be the one exception.

The only plausible argument against Sunday racing is that seven-day, year-round performance would impose an intolerable burden on those who work in the racing industry. Even this argument is not convincing. Unsociable hours are intrinsic to the leisure industry, which by definition must be working when their customers are not. But some MPs, especially Labour MPs sympathetic to producer rather than consumer interests, oppose legislation on these grounds. The Jockey Club should head them off. Monday racing, which usually features inferior hacks on inferior tracks, is unloved by (and largely unattended by) public and professionals alike. Racing could agree that, in weeks on which Sunday meetings were held, Monday would be the blank day. Parliament would then be deprived of any excuse not to change the law; and Sunday would be less flat and more fun for thousands of racing fans.

Sir, Your leader, "Mellor should stay" (July 24), perfectly summarises the reasons why the minister should not be "hounded from office by

The creation of the ministry for national heritage with a seat in the Cabinet is profoundly important and something that many of us involved at all levels with the heritage have been advocating for years. You say that David Mellor "shows every sign of succeeding in the job" and having recently taken part in four heritage discussions with him your assessment rings true to me. His knowledge and enthusiasm and his keenness that those with ideas should always find his door open bodes well for the new ministry.

You mentioned Crichel Down and the resignation of my father, Sir Thomas Dugdale, "because an official in his department made a mistake ... ". My father's accep-tance of ministerial responsibility is very different to David Mellor's predicament, which is a purely personal one.

I am heartened by the message of your editorial and am confident that it will be supported across the political spectrum.

Transport safety From Mr Ian C. Statham

Sir, Mr C. P. Mather (letter, July 21) expresses concern that the proposed division of British Rail could lead to years of litigation following a rail crash. I believe his fears need be unfounded. A well established parallel already exists in air travel. Hundreds of privately operated aircraft take off and land at airports run by private or public companies and fly in airspace controlled by a state-run air traffic control system. In the event of an accident, an efficient and independent body (the Air Accident Investigation Branch) investigates and produces a report detailing the causes. From these findings the courts can determine financial responsibility towards victims, should it be in dispute. The system works well and has contribused greatly to the fine safety record of airlines.

Sir, In the first annual report of the Press Complaints Commission, published in May, it is stated that one of

From Sir Julian Rose

Sir, The findings published in Mr Michael Murphy's study of the economics of organic farming (report, July 16) are equivocal and need to be seen in context.

Last year 6,000 full-time farmers left the land due to financial hardship; a further 6,000 farm and ancillary workers at confidently predicted that these rates will continue until the end of the century. Most of these farmers run small to medium-sized holdings, which make up the majority of UK

These statistics clearly indicate that for a high percentage farming is not profitable. The question whether it is organic or not has little or no significance. However, a much smaller percentage of farmers run large enterprises (from 500 to 5.000 acres plus). Using economies of scale and taking maximum advantage of

From Mr Robert Barr

Sir, I was interested to read that we are to pay our farmers £3.6 million to maintain some hedges. We were recently paying them to grub hedges out. Perhaps one day you will be reporting on the first of our agribusinessmen to pack 50 miles of approved" hedgerow into an acre.

A silver lining to this farce might be in the possibility of the roots of this vegetation clogging up the grant-funded land drains, which remove our precious rainfall to ditch, river and sea. This would allow more of it to refill the aquifers that used to sustain farmer and gardener without undue trouble or cost. Yours faithfully,

ROBERT BARR, Hill House, Brenchley, Kent.

Trees and rainfall

The burning of carbon fuels over the past century has increased the carbon dioxide in the upper atmosphere, where it absorbs infra-red radiation and the air is heated. In the honer parts of the world, in strong sunlight, the air may thus be too hot for clouds to form, even when there is plenty of water vapour, and without clouds no rain will fall.

In the course of collaborative research work on immune diseases in malnourished populations in central and east Africa I have revisited places where previously the rainfall was adequate. After removal of the trees there are now drought, famine and disease. In contrast, in Saudi Arabia and the Gulf states, where rainfall has always been low, I have seen the planting of trees followed by a marked alteration in rainfall. Indeed the clouds and rain following the trees resulted in flooding of a hospital in Jeddah in which I was working.

I noted an even more dramatic effect on rainfall in Dubai, where Shaikh Rashid al-Makhtoum, the ruler until his death last year, made a deliberate attempt to influence the local climate. He achieved this by planting many millions of trees and a large golf course, both of which use up atmospheric carbon dioxide throughout the whole year. The rainfall of Dubai, previously three to four inches per year, increased so that the opening of the Emirates golf course was interrupted by rainstorms and the car park flooded. The rain in Dubai continues in his memory, and this cheap and efficient climate

Acute mental patients From Mr Jerry Westall

Sir, Your health services correspondent refers (report, July 17) to research presented by Professor Julian Leff at a conference indicating that long-stay mental patients discharged from Friern and Claybury hospitals in north London are not becoming homeless or entering the justice system. The confirmation of this trend is very weicome. However, the average age of this population is nearly 60, and their discharge is accompanied by a dowry" payment from the health authority to finance their community care. The challenge that they thus present to service providers is therefore much less than that of the younger, acute cohort who have no "dowry" payment on discharge.

Dr Robert Sammut presented research at the same conference which referred to the acute admission wards for Bloomsbury and Islington. Twenty-five of the 64 allocated beds had been lost between doubling of patients referred with psychoses; bed occupancy had risen from 83 per cent to 91 per cent; and average length of stay had decreased.

The pressure on beds and higher turnover of patients are some of the difficulties faced by authorities which are resulting in the distressing number of mentally disturbed people on the streets and in prison. Profesfactors, such as the closure of large hostels, causing homelessness, but they are only part of the problem.

More research into this younger "revolving-door" group of people who follow a pattern of short admission, discharge without adequate housing or follow-up, and readmis-sion — often involving the criminal justice system — is urgently required. Yours faithfully,

My collaborators in research who are involved in forestry in these countries have calculated that provision of trees for the local population to plant, to replace those they remove for fuel, would cost about a quarter of the famine relief for the crop failure following the last drought in Ethio-pia and Sudan. A Rashid campaign to plant trees, to prevent the next droughts, in sub-Saharan Africa in particular, would, for both governments and international charities seem to be a more cost-effective solution.

Aids education

From Mrs Valerie Riches Sir, Michael Jarman's letter (July 21) defending the involvement of Barnardo's in Aids education is based on the assumption that children aged 11 to 13 "need" to know about this subject. According to BBC TV's Panorama on Aids on July 20, the vast majority of Aids cases in this country arise from high-risk groups (including homosexuals, injecting drug abusers and the sexual partners of these groups). Thus most people in the UK have very little chance of being exposed to HIV and contracting Aids, and for young adolescents the risk is effectively zero.

Yet Aids education in schools is now used as an opportunity to in-struct young people in unnatural sexual practices, including anal and oral sex. It is for this reason that many parents are concerned to protect their children from proselytising groups with "educational"

The only sort of Aids education which 11 to 13-year-olds need is to be instructed in the manifestly obvious health and social advantages of chastity and self-restraint in personal relationships. This approach, however, is conspicuously absent from officially sponsored sex/Aids education.

Nature notes

FAMILIES of swallows and house-martins are feeding together in the sky above farm buildings. In the south of England, they are at risk from hobbies with young still in the nests, who sweep in from the horizon and strike at them in mid air. Little owls, young and old, are hunging in the wheatfields: farmers combining at nights see them standing on fence posts in the glare of the tractor's headlights. Black-headed gulls are leaving their breeding colonies, and beginning to arrive back in ones and twos in parks and on playing fields.

Musk mallow is in flower in dry ditches: its petals are flimsier, and a paler pink, than those of common mallow. At field edges, purple lucerne grows wild along with other members of the pea family,

Large white butterflies are very common this year, and rise in clouds from railway embankments as a train passes. On a large burdock plant, they feed on the abundant purple flowers alongside small whites, green veined whites, gatekeepers and ringlets, all competing with bumblebees and hoverflies.

Captain Simon Christopher Thomsett, of the Royal Hampshire Regiment, married Miss Claire Mary Pearce, younger daughter of Sir Idris and Lady Pearce, at St Michael's, Mickleham, Surrey on Saturday. A guard of honour was found by officers of the regiment, one of their last social duties together as the Royal Hampshires are being disbanded as part of cutbacks in the forces. In September its soldiers will merge with the Queen's Regiment to form the Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment

Evidence of the Romans' liking for beef has been discovered by archaeologists. Ancient skulls of decapitated came and salt kilns found at Wootton Creek on the Isle of Wight are being hailed as Researchers believe that Romans used the area in salt beef before loading it aboard ships.

Freeing the Christian church from supernatural fetters

Catholicism's problems in Ire-land demonstrate in an extreme form the crisis for Christianity generally within the western world. For the churches as a whole have failed to adjust to the key shift in worldview which has been taking place for over 200 years and which, outside the sphere of religion, is now complete. The shift, that is, from supernaturalism - a world controlled and regularly intervened in by an omnipotent God (and by other transcendent powers also) to naturalism — a world which, though it may regularly surprise and delight us, does not require appeal to any force or forces outside for explanation. The reluctance of Christianity to accept this change, its continued clinging to the supernatural, has led to the churches being increasingly pushed to the margins of life in the West. Though some flourish there for it is plainly the case that conservative, evangelical Christianity is DJM growing fast - they do so in a defiant opposition to the rest of human activity. The revival of claims for miraculous healings and the driving out of demons in previously mainstream churches do aid recruiting, but at the price of causing most people to see Christianity as belonging to a lunatic fringe which they avoid like the plague. The inability of those who hold to this sort of neo-orthodoxy - and it exists in several forms - to engage in any sort of reasonable dialogue with other people reduces religion to being a private world and language for those who like it.

Where supernaturalist extravagances have been resisted, the situation is hardly any more healthy. First because the public face of Christianity has been monopolised by the extremists to such an extent that more moderate positions are not noticed. But also because the attempts made to adjust gradually (and often grudgingly) to new knowledge only when it becomes unavoidable has led, over the years, to the view of a "God of the gaps" steadily shrinking away. Current discussion around the subject of the origins of the universe shows this clearly. Whilst it may be possible to maintain that a supernatural, creator God could still lie behind the bigbang, the fact that from that point on there is no further role for such a being surely limits the status and significance it has as a focus of faith. It is hardly the basis for a Christianity understood as a way of life.

For that to be achieved, a real leap of faith is required. Christianity has to be rescued from the supernatural framework in which it has hitherto existed, and its story must be retold in terms that are natural and wholly this worldly. At this point cries of "heresy" and "reduction-ism" sound. Since Jesus plainly be-lieved in a supernatural God, to abandon that now is surely to part company from him, and say that he was wrong on this. And if that is so, what possible credibility can he have as the heart of a tradition of faith?

Jesus supernaturalism was part of the agreed understanding of the world in which he lived. Naturally, therefore, he accepted and worked with it, and with much else that was common to the people of his day. before going on to challenge them with insights that were distinctive and his own. His followers held to those insights, but were not frightened to develop them as the world changed, nor to tell them in new words to suit new settings. The shift in the fourth century from the language of a Jewish sect into that of the Greek world was no less greatthan what is called for now. .

Today more and more Chrispan people, both lay and ordained, are letting go of the impossible requirements of a supernatural faith. Large numbers - if we accept the evidence of opinion polls into the beliefs of regular worshippers - have abandoned as literal and historical events the stories of the virgin birth and of resurrection, and along with them-

But the argument is false. For the notion of individual survival beyond death. They would not, how-ever, feel that they are any less Christian because of this. Nor would they see either of the last two shifts as meaning that they have let go of what is central to faith in resurrection; the power of life to triumph over the life-denying.

Tet institutional Christianity I checks the free expression of such faith, and traditional believers are quick to say that it is not Christian. It is past time this was chal-lenged. There is here a continuity of faith which goes deeper than creeds or doctrines. The genius of Christianity has been its ability to relate to the whole of the life that human beings live. Supernaturalism now frustrates that if Christianity is to be able to bring its real insights to bear on the shaping of today's world, it has to be let go go.

book, but it remains the classic statement of the case for the "pure novel" and, as such, and because of its intelligence and lucidity, it is

Robert Liddell, novelist, travel writer and critic, died in Athens on July 23 aged 83. He was born in Tunbridge Wells on October 13, 1908.

OF THE score or so of books Robert Liddell wrote, none made big news whereit was published. But he was one of the most respected writers of his generation, and, possibly, one of the most underrated English riovel-ists of his time. His quality is amply demonstrated in a work like The Last Enchantments. The term "immensely distinguished" does not, when applied to him, sound foolish.

Robert John Liddell was educated at Haileybury College. At 19 he went up to Corpus Christi College. Oxford. where he was one of the star pupils of his year. He took first class honours in Classics in 1931, and stayed on to do a BLitt. In 1933 he was Passmore Edwards Scholar, Until 1938 he worked as senior assistant in the Department of Western Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library. Then he wenter Finland as a lecturer at the University of Helsinki. From there he went to the former Farouk I univer-sity at Alexandria where he lectured from 1942 to 1951. He was also assistant professor of English at Cairo University in 1951. From the early 1950s he lived in Athens, where he was British Council lecturer and, from 1963 until 1968, head of the English department at the university.

Robert Liddell's first four books were fiction: three novels, including The Almond Tree (1938) and a collection of short stories. Watering Place (1945). They were all published by Cape, a firm which, under its redoubtable founder — it is now odd 20 recall — hardly ever published a bad book and whose fiction list could have been tailored for the likes of Liddell, who was a most austere. elegant and thoroughly "literary"

Liddeli first began to be talked about when he published his influen-

tions," and he believes that such concentration is "so rare _ in the English novel that any writer who conscientiously practises it is almost sure to be accused of 'imitating Jane Austen', whether their minds are alike or not." His ideal novelist is not in fact Henry James — which one would have expected — but Jane Austen and the twentieth century writer whom he assumed to be most like her, Ivy Compton-Burnett.

He wrote invaluably on both novelists in two books, The Novels of Iny Compton-Burnett (1955) and The Novels of Jane Austen (1963). Walter Allen thought Liddell's Treatise was "too prissy and governessy to be quite admirable" but found his novels to be something quite different and, in particular, the one which most have agreed is his masterpiece. The Last Enchantments (1948), which is set in north Oxford and whose title refers to Matthew Arnold's famous eulogy of the city. The Treatise is indeed a trifle lacking in humour, and does strike its reader as being somewhat absolute; it is nevertheless a standard text for serious novelists who may, of course, take it or leave it. Liddell avoided, and advocated the avoidance of descriptive writing — but his travel books such as The Morea (1958) abound in fine descriptive

The Last Enchantments is a relentless comedy in whose narrative voice we encounter a sort of caricature of the writer of the Treatise. The book is certainly out of the Compton-Burnett stable, but it does something Comp-ton-Burnett could hardly have done better and it is still, over 30 years after it first appeared, on the list of many readers' "funniest novels" along with the best of Compton Mackenzie and P. G. Wodehouse. In the book, Liddell describes some apparently half-mad but utterly convincing people in Oxford: scholars, minor writers, their servants and landladies, and university-hangers-on. The central character, the pretentious and unforgettable Mrs Foyle, is a female Goriot, even a sort of female Lear, but is somehow unable to gain tragic stature. The talk of Oxford tea parties has never been so brilliantly capnured.

Other novels, particularly The Gantillons (1940) and Stepsons (1969) are almost as good. Liddell specialised in family tyrants, sadists and inventors of hateful and puttingdown remarks. One remembers Margery Gantillon and, in Stepsons, the horrible German stepmother, Elsa, a destroyer of the young who makes readers shudder for years after they have put the book down. It was cruelty and pettiness that Liddell was so good at depicting, as in Margery Gantillon's trick of giving people what they hate to eat and then asking such questions as: "If it wasn't nice, is it likely I should have given it to you for dinner?" Liddell may have had very narrow ideas of what was allowable in a novel and what was not, but the limits he set were ideal in

He translated Demetrios Sicilianos's Old And New Athens (1962) and Professor Linos Politis's admirable A History Of Modern Greek Literature (1973) and wrote four good travel books, including Byzantium and Istanbul (1956), and a superb Jamesian radio play called A Lesson From The Master (broadcast in 1966). Another valuable work was his biography of the great Greek homosexual poet - possibly the most enchanting to read in all twentieth century literature — Constantine Cavafy: A Critical Biography (1974). He never married.

CAPTAIN PETER MANISTY

Captain Peter Forster Manisty, DSC, MBE, a pioneer of the railway Britain, died on June 15 aged 76. He was born on July 5, 1915.

DECORATED at Anzio, mentioned three times in disparches, and the captain of one of Her Majesty's aircraft carriers — Peter Manisty was a rising star in the Royal Navy. But he gave it all up because he wanted to run a railway.

This lifelong ambition was at first frustrated when British Rail said that it had no job for him. So Manisty decided to start a railway of his own and became a founder of the Bluebell Line. It was Manisty who, in 1959, gave it its name despite the doubts of other committee members who said that no one would know where the line was. However, it caught the public imagination and the passengers. Several years on. Manisty started the Association of Railway Preservation Societies (ARPS), and threw his energy into the newly-created Transport Trust, a charity formed to protect, among other things, Britain's rail heritage. In the 1970s Manisty, already a leading pioneer of private railways, launched the operation "Barry Rescue". On discovering dozens of British Rail's old steam engines waiting to be broken up in a scrapyard in South Wales, he negotiated with its owner, secured the agreement of British Rail and organised volunteers to restore them.

Sceptics shook their heads. Many engines looked beyond repair, their brass fittings missing and their boilers choked with rust. However, Manisty had served in a minesweeper that had rescued 3,000 soldiers at Dunkirk, and ever since had regarded nothing as impossible. That 950 locomotives survive, a quarter of a century after the age of steam, is due in no small measure to Manisty's vision and energy. As a boy he wanted to be an engine driver. His father, Pay-master Rear-Admiral Sir Eldon Manisty, persuaded him to try warships instead. Born in Ealing, west London.

young Peter went to the nauti-cal college at Pangbourne and later to the training ship Frobisher, where, in 1933 George V presented him with the King's Dirk for being the most outstanding cadet.

Manisty served as a navigating officer throughout the second world war. He was in the carrier Furious and the cruiser Orion, in which he was serving when mentioned in dispatches during the invasion of Sicily and when he won the DSC at Anzio. He was mentioned again after D-Day, and then left to serve as fleet navigation officer in the

After the Japanese surrender he served in the aircraft carrier Theseus and as executive officer, and then captain, of the aircraft carrier Unicorn during the Korean war. When posted to the staff of Nato's supreme allied commander in Paris, he surprised his contemporaries by leaving the navy.

The year was 1958, the age of the "golden bowler", when the forces were contracting with the approaching end of national service. Manisty, still only 43, saw it as a golden opportunity to revert, at least in part, to his boyhood ambition and seek a second career with British Rail. BR, though. was little interested in naval officers, however enthusiastic they might be. Its own man-agement training scheme was well established.

Manisty found a sales job with Plessey, which suited his naval experience. He travelled widely for a decade, selling electronics throughout the Far East and the Middle East.

He indulged his love of trains in his spare time, becoming involved with the Bluebell Line on leaving the fleet, and then throwing himself into railway preservation almost full-time on retiring from Plessey in his late 50s. His work was recognised by his being made an MBE.

Known affectionately by reservationists as "Captain Pugwash", he drilled disparate bands of volunteers into an effective force that won the attention of Whitehall. He gave up the chairmanship of the ARPS only five years ago. He is survived by his wife,

Johnny Letman, jazz trumpeter, died in New York on July 17 aged 74. He was born in McCormick, South Carolina, on September 6, JOHNNY Letman was a mainstream jazz trumpeter who combined the art of playing lead trumpet in the big bands of Cab Calloway, Lucky Millinder and Count Basic with a solo style that owed much to Louis Arm-strong. The trombonist Dicke-Wells described Lemman as one of the major disciples of Armstrong, who had devel o ted his style in new directions, and the planist Sammy Price (who toured Europe with Leman in 1977) cused to introduce him as "a young man from America who is following in the footsteps of Louis Armstrong".

Letman enjoyed a second career in the 1980s as trumpeter and singer with the New Orleans Blues Serenaders. This band, drawn from the successful New York stage show One Mo Time and led by the Swedish pianist Lars Edegran, toured Europe frequently. Letman became widely known for his regular appearances at European festivals with the Serenaders and with the Harlem Jazz and Blues Band, with which he came to Europe in 1990.

In New York, he was respected by fellow musicians as one of the most reliable and enthusiastic session trumpeters. His diligence in supporting Buck Clayton through ill health in the 1970s was repaid when Clayton offered him the lead chair in the Swing Band, which Clayton led for the last years of his life. John Bernard Letman grew up in Chicago, where he played trumpet with a boys' club before working with Nat. "King" Cole while still a teenager. He played with many groups in the city before making his first records in Los Angeles with Freddie Stack in 1942. He went on to play with Horace Henderson's big band and in the mid-1940s record-ed with Phil Moore, Lena Horne and Una Mae Carlisle In 1949. Letman first recorded with the organist Milt Buckner, with whom he made a successful French tour almost 20 years later, both men recording in Paris with Tiny Grimes and Hal Singer. In the 1950s Letman played and recorded with many of the most famous names in jazz. including Basie. Coleman Hawkins, Stuff Smith and Earl Hines. His first major recording under his own name, Many Angles of John Letman, appeared in 1960. It revealed an individual jazz voice, steeped in Armstrong. but recognisably independent. Perhanc his hest work is preserved on a 1977 disc from his European tour with Sammy Price under the title Just Right, although he had become known to English enthusiasts before that for his recording on Doug Dobell's "77" label with Pete Brown and Bernard Addison. Lerman suffered, in the 1980s, some tip problems that threatened to curtail his second career, and he was advised by Doc Cheatham (12 years his senior) to change his mouthpiece and embouchure completely. However, Letman was determined not to sacrifice his rich tone and highpressure method of reaching the upper register. He perse-vered, and continued to develop musically. His playing during a tour of Germany, Switzerland, Italy and Finland that he had completed shortly before his death confirmed that his powers were

ALFRED DRAKE

Alfred Drake, whose rich haritone voice spearheaded the revival of American musical comedy, died of heart failure, after suffering from cancer, at Mount Sinai Medical Centre. Manhattan, on July 25, aged 77. He was born in New York.

WHEN the curtain went up on the first Broadway production of Oklahoma! in 1943, and Alfred Drake began singing "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning", a new era was born in the musical theatre. The production heralded a move away from the stilted nonsense of the pre-war years towards something approaching truth and beauty. Drake, in the lead role of Curly, won universal praise and the Drama Critics Award for his singing of such numbers as "People Will Say We're in Love" and "The Surrey with the Fringe on Top." Drake went on to star in the original production of Kiss Me, Kate in 1948 and five years later won a second Drama Critics Award and a Tony Award for his perfor-mance in the leading role of Hajj in Kismet. Brooks Atkinson wrote in the New York Times: "Alfred Drake gives a superb performance. He sings like a thoroughbred and with one of the best voices in the theatre. But Mr Drake is also an immensely resourceful actor." The praise was well justified. Although it was his musical roles that brought him fame, Drake was a serious actor who held his own with such legendary figures as Katharine Hepburn in Much Ado About Nothing in 1957, and with Richard Burton in the 1963 Broadway production of Hamlet. His last major drama was Jose Quintero's production of The Skin of Our Teeth in 1975. As a romantic lead, Alfred Drake had a remarkably long run. In 1973, at the age of 58, he once again received rave reviews for his performance as the suave, silver-haired Honoré Lachalles in a revival of Gigi, singing "I Remember it Well" and "Thank Heaven for Little Girls". "Thank Heaven for Alfred Drake," responded the New York Times headline. Born Alfred Capurro,

Drake grew up in Brooklyn. With the encouragement of his musically-inclined mother. he began singing with the choir of Our Lady of Good Counsel Church and later ioined the Brooklyn College glee club. His professional career began inauspiciously; he was hidden away in a Gilbert and Sullivan chorus at the Adelphi Theatre in Manhattan. He later joined his elder brother in a small opera company performing on the Steel Pier in Atlantic City. Drake was an understudy in the musical White Horse Inn in 1935, and two years later had a chorus part in the Rodgers and Hart musical Babes in Arms. It was there that he became noticed, and began a progression that led to Oklahoma!. Perhaps surprisingly, he never made the jump from Broadway to Hollywood. Although he appeared in several network television specials, including a revival of Kiss Me, Kate, his only appearance on the big screen was in the unmemorable Tars and Spars in 1946. Drake was inducted into the Theatre Hall of Fame in 1981 and in 1990 received the Tony Honor of Excellence award. He is survived by his second wife, Esther, whom he met while they were both in the cast of Oklahoma!, and by two

ON THIS DAY

For four days bloody riots paralysed New York A Union conscription act incited the populace to overpowering the police, seizing an armoury, setting fire to buildings. looting, and attacking Negroes. Casualties were stimated at over 1.000.

> THE RIOTS IN NEW YORK.

The New York papers give fearful descriptions of the scenes of riot which followed the attempt to enforce the conscription. The New York Journal of Commerce of the 14th thus summarizes the events of the first day-"Yesterday witnessed the most serious riot which has ever been known in our city, and it raged all day un-suppressed. In fact the upper portion of New York was seized by the mob, and held through-out the day, and no exertions sufficed to give the least check to their proceedings. It is with the deepest pain that we record the facts elsewhere — facts the facts elsewhere — facts which will be memorable in the history of our city, hitherto celebrated for its law-abiding character. The origin of the riot was in the Ninth Congressional District, where the draughting commenced on Saturday last. A great crowd gathered yesterday morning around the office in 3d-avenue, where the draughting was in where the draughting was in progress. On Saturday the drawing of names had not been interrupted. Sunday intervened, and no one anticipated any trouble, nor is there any reason to believe that the occurrences of yesterday were premeditated or organized. On the contrary, there was prob-ably no idea of it in the mind of any one concerned up to the moment of the outbreak. Then a pent-up fire seemed to break out suddenly, and the absence of the military forces relied on to check such demonstrations

the 3d-avenue, and the riot was at first confined to that immediate locality. The officers escaped, it is hoped, without serious injury, but the furious crowd vented their rage on the building, set fire to it, and then forbade any interference of the fire companies, so that it was destroyed. The fire was not confined to this house. Like the mob, once kindled it was unrestrained and destroyed what it touched, no one staying its course. From the locality in which it commenced the riot spread into various parts of the city. Men everywhere were excitable, and the whole community seemed to be in a state of nervous anxiety, while portions of it were ready to add to the fury of the mob. Nothing was talked of but the draught, and the burden of conversation on that subject was the old story, which had been again and again talked over, but which now had fresh interest. The rapidity with which the riot spread is unexampled in history. In a few hours the whole of the upper part of the city was in possession of the mob, and a scene commenced whose horror is beyond description. Without leader-ship, without any common design, they selected objects for their attack, and went from one to another with tremendous rapidity. The details of much that was done will be found eisewhere. Much remains un-reported, since, for various reasons, it was impossible to collect the facts. The lower part of the city remained quiet until the evening with the exception of excited crowds in the neighbourhood of the park. About half-past 7 a sudden attack was made on the office of the Tribune. For a few minutes the mob had possession of the building and a considerable amount of damages was done when a body of age was done, when a body of police charged on them, cleared the building, and formed a strong guard around Algol, the eclipsing binary variable star in Perseus, fades from its usual brightness of 2.1 to 3.4 magnitude every 69 hours taking about five hours to fade and another five hours to recover normal brightness. It can be seen when faint this month about these times: 4d 02h, 6d 23h, 27d 00h and 29d 21h.

Algol is one of the brighter stars in the constellation Perseus which can be seen coming up in the north-east soon after dark during the summer and early autumn evenings. The constellation also gives its name to the Perseid meteor shower which can be relied upon to give a fair to good display almost every year.

Meteors or shooting stars are hard to see unless the sky is clear and dark. so the study of these fleeting objects is much hampered by moonlight, when only the brighter ones can be seen. This year the Moon is full on the 13th which could hardly be worse as the shower usually reaches its maximum intensity on the night of the 12th/13th.

However, astronomers will be keeping a sharp lookout despite the unfavourable conditions because the Perseids could be more active this year than usual. Meteor showers occur when the Earth intercepts a stream of particles orbiting the Sun. Most of these streams of particles are the debris of comets and in many cases the parent comet has been identified.

The Perseids are associated with the periodic comet Swift-Tuttle, discovered independently by the American astronomers Lewis Swift and Horace Tuttle in July 1862. The comet reached 2nd mag-nitude and had a fine 30 degree tail by late August.

At a time when astronomical photography was in its infancy, the accurate positions needed to enable the comet's future position to be calculated were difficult to obtain but a period of about 120 years was found, putting the next return of the comet in the early 1980s. Much work has now been done to obtain a better orbit but it can only be based on observations made in 1862. The comet was not seen about 1982 so it may well have passed us by: it may have been unusually bright in 1862.

A comet seen in 1737 by a Jesuit missionary in Peking may be an earlier return of Swift-Tuttle and if this comet Kegler and Swift-Tuttle are the same the period could be 130 years, making a return in 1992 a possibility. Another possible due is a sudden burst in activity in the Perseids in 1991. Larger particles, giving brighter meteors, are expected near to the comet so this could indicate that the comet has not passed unseen

So despite the bright Moon, it will be worth looking out for the meteors over the period August 11-14. The radiant from which the meteors will appear to come lies near the end star of a line of three (in Perseus) pointing bee

Haute couture loses out to high camp

FROM LIZ SMITH, FASHION EDITOR, IN PARIS

PARIS haute couture appears to be suffering an identity crisis. As the twice-yearly shows opened in Paris at the weekend, the exclusive club of 21 couturiers who conform to the regulations of their métier laid down by the chambre syndicale of couture has been hijacked.

Polls support Mellor

Continued from page I who yesterday wrote letters of complaint to the three broadsheet editors, said in a statement: "Many of these stories are based on the accounts given by Cerian Jones. Earlier last week Mr Jones tried to sell his account of events to The People. He asked for £10,000. We refused his offer and told him his story was inaccurate. It contained so many errors as to render it worthless. The People also denied a claim in The Observer that the People reporter had used a ladder to enter the flat occupied by Miss de Sancha and rejected a report in The Sunday Telegraph that a security company installed equipment in the flat and that there had been a month-long bugging operation. The tabloid also denied that Mr Jones had listened in to any of the conversations at any time.

The PCC is to study how The People obtained the tapes as part of its enquiry into all press intrusions into privacy in the past 18 months. The Commission will examine whether the newspaper industry's code of practice needs to be modified and will report its findings later this year to Sir David Calcutt, QC, who was ap-pointed by Mr Mellor to conduct an independent assessment of press self-regulation.

A Gallup poll of 1.000 people surveyed on Thursday and Friday in The Sunday Telegraph showed that 62 per cent said Mr Mellor should not resign, 34 per cent said he should and the rest were undecided. A survey of 100 Tory MPs by the Mail on Sunday showed that 54 lieved he should go and 20 refused to comment.

Mr Mellor will return to his Whitehall office today following a quiet day with his family.

While not referring directly to Lord Tebbit, Mr Lamont said: "The effects of German ion would be lelt by us even it there were no exchange rate mechanism. Germany is this country's largest export customer and we cannot escape the consequences ol what is happening in Germany."

Nightmares and the Dream Team

Even for the Olympics, this was a bit much. United States took on Angola at basketball yester-day. I remember playing football in Hongkong against a team of Vietnam-ese boat people, "Let's give the refugees a hard time, lads, said our skipper.

The top American basketball stars who make up the Dream Team the sensation of the Games so far, earn around $35 million a year. The Angolan players earn about $2,000 from the game. That, of course, is because they are privileged people in Angola. The American team is on average 10cm taller and 25kg heavier than the Angolans. The United States won by 116 points to 48. In the first half they scored 33 points without reply: this is just not supposed to hap-pen in basketball. Their superiority was colossal. Dunks, jams, lay-ups, rain-bows from three-point land: they gave the Ango-lans a hard time all right. How much homework did the Americans do? "I don't know anything about Angola," said "Sir" Charles Barkley, one of the biggest stars in American basketball, before the match yesterday. "But I know Angola is in trouble." Memo to Sir Charles: your are quite right. Angola suf-fered 16 years of civil war after independence from Portugal in 1975. Half a million people died, two thirds of them women and children. The country has its first multiparty elec-tions in September, Troubles facing the new gov-ernment include milana. cholera, yellow lever, and shortages of food, water and medical supplies. Etcetera, etcetera.

"War destroyed every-thing but basketball," said Victorina Cunha, the Ango-lan team coach, a white man of Perfuguese descent.
He is one of those extraordinary exiled people you find all over the developing world: a man who has chosen to throw in his lot with the new country. Such people do not think of returning home. They are home.

Doctors, traders, conservationists. missionaries, farmers, teachers, writers: I have met many of them in. many different places. They are sometimes heroic drinkers, and often unstoppable talkers. They are almost invariably consumed with an impossible mixture of hopeless love and despairing cynicism about their land. They tell you how the country has gone to hell since such and such a time, but they know beyond all possible doubt if # they will never leave.

What does Sir Charles know of that? "In this country, basketball is the only thing that makes some-thing great," Cunha said "People have so many diffi-culties. But when I win they win."

Cumha kept basketball going in Angola through years of trouble. His team's appearance here at the Olympics, after winning the African championships, is nothing less than a triumph. To compete against the American millionaires was their prize. They led 2-1, they were drawing 7-7, they fought with sup 3-stars, and they got beaten out of sight out of sight.

"My main difficulty is to "My main difficulty is to convince the players that basketball is work." Cunha said. "It's hard to focus on basketball when there's not enough food or water." Some might question the value of a life spent in third world basketball, but at any time the triviality of sport is life-enhancing stuff. This life-enhancing stuff. This counts double in troubled

For Angola, Cunha has constructed something on which to rejoice.

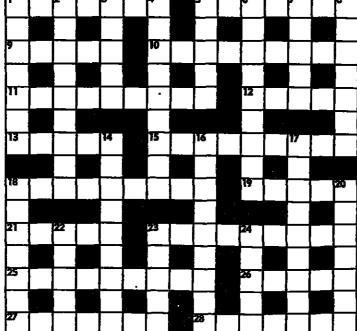

The idea of playing hoops in the middle of a civil war may seem nothing less than demented, but if you stand somewhere else, looks like a kind of sanity. There is a glorious stubbornness about it. It is the same stubbornness from which the many of the great martyrs are made.

The Angolans are, of course staying in the Olym-pic Village. The Americans are in a smart hotel. Shouldn't they be living with Olympian brothers and sisters? The point of the Olympics is to go out and beat the athletes from the rest of the world, not to live with them," said John can player. "The Indians didn't dine with General

considers the spread of the cult of the camcorder and what video diaries tell us about the hand that shakes

teve Feltham decided to follow his dreams. He gave up his job as a burglar alarm salesman in Dorset. sold his house, and set off to the Scottish Highlands in a converted mobile library van. Since the age of seven, he had been fascinated by the Loch Ness monster. Now, at 28, he would be a full-time monsterhunter, encamped on the shores of

He had everything a monsterhunter needs a wind generator whirting on the roof, for electric power, a pair of good binoculars; a strong dose of incurable optimism: but, most important of all, a portable video camera. This was not just to capture evidence, if he saw the monster emerge from the mysterious deep. It was to chronicle his entire quest, successful or not to make a video diary. BBC 2 broadcasts it on Saturday under the title Desperately Seeking Nessie.
It is a do-it-yourself light comedy.

Mr Feltham, obsessive or not, knows a joke when he sees one. Surrounded by thick winter fog, he confides to the camera: "Some days are better than others for monsterhunting." He often addresses his camera as "you". It has become his friend and companion, like Long John Silver's parrot.

His programme is an emertaining blip in the usual pattern of BBC 2's Video Diaries, which began a new series at the weekend. Many of them come closer to DIY psychoanalysis than to DIY comedy. In last Saturday's Searching for a Killer, for example, Geoffrey Smith went back to Haiti to try to me to terms with the day, in 1987, when he was caught up in a polling-day bloodbath. A maverick (or CIA-sponsored?) gunman sprayed bullets all around. Haitians were killed as they tried to vote. A friend of Mr Smith's was shot dead at his feet. Mr Smith was shot in the leg.

An Australian based in London,

he came back to Britain. But he could never get the recurring nightmare of that gunman out of his mind. With his BBC-supplied camcorder on his shoulder, he went back into the real mightmare of Haiti, and faced fresh fear and danger — and the nightmares left him. "The camera was my only companion," he said. "I needed a friend that would listen. It is a cathartic device when you use it the right way. I said to it, 'I hate all this'. But I became attached to the thing. I buried myself in the

Or you can find yourself through filming, as Willa Woolston did. She is an American-born portrait painter, also living in London. In the first series of Video Diaries, in 1990, she used her camcorder to go back to her American family, to come to terms with the torment torture, really — that she suffered as a child at the hands of her stepmother. She has now gone back and videoed a second diary (to be transmitted in September) about how they have coped with the knowledge they disinterred. For her, the camcorder was a kind of exorcist, driving out demons. "It was extremely distressing at first," she told me. "A painted portrait is objective. Here you were being subjective. I was unaccustomed to looking at myself like that. One is accustomed to glossing over what is difficult in life, explaining it away." After her first programme, she set up a Child Abuse Survivor Network because so many viewers rang in.

These video diaries are produced by the BBC's community proticated end of the video culture that is galloping up on us, unawares. The trigger for the series, back in 1990, was the arrival of a small but high-quality carncorder.

Trade may be crashing around most shopkeepers' ears, but camcorders are booming. The market analysts, Mintel, say that sales began to take off in Britain in 1985. In that year, 60,000 were sold, at an average price of £1,250. Last year, it was 475,000, at an average of £710. Amstrad's new "king of the budget camcorders" sells for £499. The business is so alive with innovation that "everything is outdated within weeks." says Jeremy Gibson, the editor of Video Diaries. He gave his current diarists a Dutch camcorder, from Philips, because it was easier to edit with. "But I decide each year-end what we'll use next time."

iarists get some training in, he says, "the grammar of television". Editorial discussions help them keep to the point. At the end, there is a huge editing job. But the diarist has the right of veto.
"This little camera." Mr Gibson says, "shows up the unfortunate methods of most fly-on-the-wall TV: the kerfuffle, the time, the crew. You can use this without threatening other people."

A camcorder records the emotions of the user, as well as those of more so. Watching videos, you begin to wonder about the hand that shakes the camera. Shops find, in fact, that camcorders are mostly bought to record emotive moments. "Baby's first words, a wedding, a once-in-a-lifetime holiday," says Paul Wheaton, the photography manager at Dixons' Marble Arch branch. (Dixons have 30 per cent of the camcorder business.)

Professional photographers are beginning to feel wary. "The prob-Henrys - the rela-with camcorder," says Pete Randall, a north London weddings specialist. "For now, video is an 'also'. Photographs are more accessible." But Mr Randall has a camcorder for the high points in his own family's life. About a million viewers watch each

Saturday-night edition of Video Diaries, with (in Mr Gibson's words) its "sociological de-construction of TV power; the power is in people's own hands". Almost a million and a half watched BBC 2's Diaries variant in June and July. (Some of these will be repeated on the Def II early-evening mid-week youth programme, from August 18.) But Granada's You've Been Framed. presented by Jeremy Beadle, is playing the game to different rules. It has reached 18.7 million viewers for a single programme of video-captured mishaps. It is entertainment. It is close to the way most people use their own camcorders.

"Dixons and Currys rub their hands with glee when a series goes out," says Jane Machaught, the producer. Mr Wheaton, at Dixons. confirms that it helps. The appetite for video grows by what it feeds on. Ms Machaught is busy now on the third series, for the autumn. The idea for You've Been Framed came from America's Your Favorite Home Video, the programme President Bush is said to like best. In America, video voyeurs can now enjoy Witness Video, a prime-time shows videos of real deaths and disasters and which invites viewers' offerings. British taste, according to Ms Macnaught, is still for shots of animals, children, sport: "cats with balls of wool". Tapes reach Ms Macnaught by the vanload. This year she expects between 40,000 50,000. Her four full-time viewers play them all.

"It's spontaneous family slapstick," she says. "There's the recognition factor. It brings back the times you said, 'I wish I had a camera'." The swift spread of camcorders has broadened what is sent in. "It used to be always wedding clips, and children's first birthdays. But now we have decorating mishaps: dad laying the patio. Or graduation ceremonies. It's a moving piece of family history. And if I ever see another skiing fall..." Viewers don't send her much sex or nudity: "Our most notorious video was one and a half hours of a man decorating his bedroom with no clothes on." No doubt, in the world outside Beadle, camcorders (like Polaroid cameras before them) follow their owners into the bedroom. Mintel say that one British home in 20 has a camcorder now: they expect one in seven by 1994. In Japan it already is one in five. Two years ago, Sony created the tiny lightweight "palmoorder". As its price drops, it may become the camcorder equivalent of the Kodak Brownie, which sold in every colworun's in the 192US 200 1930s and created the family ales of eveything photographic have been cut back by the recession - except camcorders. They are usually made by electronics companies. not the traditional camera firms. They have already crippled home cine and slides. For family snaps, Kodak fights back this autumn with a roll of camera film that can be processed onto compact disc. and played (like video) through your television set, frame by frame. Carncorders are also destroying old interpretations of photography. For the critic. Susan Sontag, in her book. On Photography, the essential thing about a photograph is that it captures one moment in time, and freezes it. Its techniques of composition often bear some relation to fine art. But the images photo tells a story, but every video does. It is a new folk-narrative. Michael Langford teaches photography at the Royal College of Art. "Video is such a draw", he says. "because people end up as stars on their own television sets. They're up there with their heroes," Geoffrey Smith says that, in Video Diaries, "We are watching life exactly as it happened". But "life" sometimes needs prompting towards the demands of television. In Haiti, "I found myself doing things for

of video's walking, talking snapshot

take place in real time. Not every recording what I was doing". The usual family video tape is kept, just as it was filmed, unedited. A slice of life in a box. But things never stay that simple. Ian Campbell, editor of the buffs' monthly. Camcorder User, has been judging the British amateur video awards. They included elaborate excursions into solo film-making and acting. "In the 1970s", he muses, "new film directors emerged from comvideos. In the 1990s I think we'll see directors who began at home with a humble camcorder." Four adults out of five have a camera already, which they are not going to throw away.Mr Langford says: "Most people still want things in frames and albums, to dwell on. But a video is more of a personal eye view. If the composition isn't perfect, the action will carry it through. There's greater freedom."

The video culture is penetrating everywhere. We are becoming a species in love with its own moving image. In Mr Feltham's video diary on Saturday, he often interconnects with other cameramen. He becomes, he says, "an overnight success in Japan", when a Japanese news team arrives. He observes David Bellamy, the ecologist, followed by an entire camera crew. creeping along the Loch Ness foreshore in search of supposed spoor from the monster. When a coachload of tourists disembark next to him, about half seem to his BBC-issue Philips Explorer, he videos them videoing. Swearing allegiance to the office culture

The question came out of the blue, from the back seat of the car on a school run. "Mum, why do people in offices swear so much?" I played for time. "Um — do they?" "Yes," said the relentless child. "Every time I've been into an office ever since I was a baby they're using F words and S words all the time. Why?"

I thought hastily which offices her seven years had taken her into. Not all of them BBC or newspaper. offices, by any means: what with babysitters showing off their charges to old colleagues, trips behind the scenes to pick up a repaired computer, snippets of television and so forth, the child had seen a fair if fleeting snapshot of office life today.

And her conclusion is that people at work are a foul-mouthed bunch. "You tell us not to swear" she went on. "And you tell us that when we're grown up it's good to go to work. So what about us swearing

I tried hedging. I said no, no, she must have misheard. I bet they didn't really swear, not with a child there. She was scornful. "Us being and trust. If I say, "B— the there didn't count," she said. "It suppliers problems, they can b— The result of th wasn't at us. But while you're yakking to your friends and we look round at the other people because we're bored, there's always someone saying 'Oh' Sh., I haven't phoned Roger" or "F this b-photocopier, or " She was starting to enjoy the licence of quotation rather too much, so I hastily caved in. Yes. darling, I suppose people in offices do swear rather a lot. Not as much as on building sites perhaps, but more than they used to.

I demanded time to cobble up an explanation, and drove on thinking

At the most basic level, it is to do with emphasis, a desire to seem aggressive and dynamic. But it is more than that. I really think office foul-mouthedness contributes to camaraderie it is a troopship phenomenon. Put a group of people together and they will come up with conventions, tribal signs of recognition, buzzwords.

To the reasonably sensitive person, swearing in front of someone else (rather than at them) betokens a certain mutual understanding WORKING LIFE

Libby Purves has a hard time explaining well get it here on Thursday," I am trusting you to know that I am not really a coarse and inexpressive type: that I am merely under pressure, and exploding into healthy aggression on behalf of our joint, important effort. You will agree, politely, with me. "Always were b-tards, those suppliers." Some close-knit groups have their own particular pet words, signalling even greater closeness. In one firm a hearty exclamation of "Arseholes!" may be as routine as the "ting!" of the telephone; in another, something on the lines of

"Judast" may suit.

On the whole, though, religious blasphemies are shunned in decent offices: real religion might lie deeper than comradeship in some one of those present, but never have been explicitly mentioned because of British reserve; so the rest are On the whole, the smaller and more isolated the group the worse the language — unless, of course, there is one stickler for decorum in its midst. Boat crews grow alarmingly ripe in their language; so do denizens of small rooms at the end of the corridor where few outsiders ever venture. The presence of customers tones things down a lot. and there is more circumspection in offices which deal with the public on the telephone: you don't want to find yourself relaxing so much that you pick up the phone and snap:

how can I help you?" And the presence of women can calm things down too; until they in turn begin to swear freely, and the men relax even more broadly than before, and the whole place starts to sound like an alternative cabaret night in a cellar at the Edinburgh Festival. Then someone who used to work there years ago drops in with her innocent, wide-eared toddler, and the ingrained habit causes scandal (and much pleasure) to the child. So I don't know what to tell her. It clearly isn't true to say that only nasty, coarse, violent people swear. Nor to take the more modern line that only unimaginative and stupid people do it because they don't know many words. If that were so, why is the air in newspaper offices so blue? And how do you account for all those terminally unimaginative and verbally inept people who never swear at all, even to say bum? So I gave up. "I don't really know why they do. Silly, isn't it?" She snorted in amused contempt. "When I have an office," she observed, "I'm going to make a rule that people have got to swear. Then they probably won't do it." I think "Central blasted Supplies here, this child has potential.

And the best is silence . . .

FRIDAY'S sky was dear, stars twinkled. Torches lit the way to the stately Victorian New Court, St John's College. Britain's least likely open-air: cinema. Some minutes after ten o'clock, the projector whirred, and hell broke loose over the speakers. Concorde took off; Martians landed: at some nearby zoo. it was feeding time.

We were listening to the computergenerated, electro-acoustic score of Arnaud Pent, wrestling to match music to the complex play of faces and space in Carl Dreyer's The Passion of Joan of Arc. Originally Dreyer's austere masterpiece was thrust at the world with a score by two operetta composers. Victor Alix and Léo Pouget. When his film reappeared in the Fifties, it had a smorgasbord of Bach, Vivaldi and such. If Dreyer heard Petit's electronics from his current celestial home, he doubtless reached for the headache pitts. This is one silent film that actively benefits from silence.

Aside from the loudspeakers, there were some human participants in the cacophony. The composer perched at the sound mixer. Sheltered beneath a green tarpaulin under the screen, nine members of Paul Robinson's Harmonie Band bashed, tootled and plucked during the third of the film's five acts. But their sounds, like allothers, were wilfully oblivious to whatever Renée Falconetti. Dreyer's magnificent Joan, experienced. When doctors treated Joan to some bloodletting, up burst a frenzy of wood blocks. Thunderous electronic clangs

"IF YOU are going to spend all that money, John," said Audrey Mildmay advice, and Glyndebourne has been doing it properly for nearly 60 years. The inescapable fact is that "I was afraid of becoming a prisoner of the film's formal and emotive power," Petit has said: "I tried to watch it as little as possible." Ducking the surface drama of Joan's trial and burning, he tried to illustrate the film's inner battle between human folly and spiritual faith. But his quest only served to obstruct, not illuminate.

By itself, the print was a wonder. Until recently, available copies drew on a substitute version Dreyer prepared from out-takes and rushes; the original negative had been lost shortly after the film's disastrous Copenhagen premiere in 1928. Exhibitors and censors performed their own tampering: out went some poetic shots of torture instruments, and a piercing glimpse of Joan at the stake crumpled behind flames.

Then, in 1982, eureka! Lurking in a cupboard at a Norwegian psychiatric hospital lay a surviving original print. The Cinematheque Française undertook its restoration, and commissioned Petit's score. Despite the impromptu Cambridge venue, the projected image was wonderfully crisp, encouraging us to marvel anew at Falconemi's anguish.

Renée Falconetti: magnificent and anguished as Joan of Arc and the furrowed faces of judges and bishops set off against bare walls and floors. Dreyer's film must already be one of the most analysed in history, scholars should now have a field day pondering this authoritative new print.

The Cambridge Film Festival

showed enterprise and bravery in mounting the version's British premiere, in the open air to boot. But Petit's barrage will not do. As far as musical accompaniment goes, back to the drawing board, please. Best of all, back to silence.

GEOFF BROWN

Taking leave in style

most terrifying operatic interpretations of the day.

The most successful aspect of Friday's truly final gala was the cunning way it had been structured. Everything - from Sir George Christie's relaxed introductions (we are, still, essentially, guests in a private house) to the extracts themselves - said something about the past and the future of Glyndebourne.

Montserrat Caballe made her British debut at Glyndebourne in 1965, and flew in the day before a rather important first night in Barcelona to sing Desdemona's Willow Song with a security of line and husbed h phrase that happily effaced memories of her ill-judged appearances at Covent

Garden recently. There were other Glyndebourne discoveries: Frederica

von Stade and Ruggero Raimondi, who sang Mozart and Rossini, mainstays of a repertory that has otherwise ranged far and wide. Glyndebourne contributed to the Verdi revival back in the 1930s, and Kim Begley sang Macduff's aria with a style and intensity worthy of Luciano Pavarotti, for whom he was standing in.

Glyndebourne introduced The Rake's Progress to Britain (conservative - ha!) and led the way with Idomeneo and Monteverdi — all three were represented — and Cynthia Haymon sang Gershwin's "Summmertime" as a reminder of one of the great evenings in the house. Dame Janet Baker, with characteristic generosity, introduced Stade in one of her own great roles (Monteverdi's Penelope). Elisabeth Söderström recalled how she had succeeded Sena Jurinac in 1957 and in turn passed the Strauss torch on to Felicity Lott (unsurpassable in the Capriccio finale); and Sir Geraint Evans reminisced inimitably.

The evening opened and closed with Figaro, which will open the new theatre — an extremely well defined gleam in Sir George's eye, indeed a burgeoning concrete reality - on May 28, 1994. That is frighteningly, enticingly soon. The Ariadne-style fireworks afterwards were absolutely spiffing.

On July 6 I castigated the Royal Opera for performing Rossini's one-act Viaggio a Reims with two intervals. In fact, that was how it was first done in Paris in 1825, as I should jolly well have remembered from Stendhal's account. Many apologies.

DANCE: DENMARK Stepping lightly round a literary life

HOW do you indicate literary genius in a ballet character? Not by having the performer sit and scribble, that's for sure. So Flemming Flindt set himself a hard task in undertaking a ballet inspired by the life of Karen Blixen, to the joint commission of the City of Aarhus and TV2/Denmark.

Luckily he had one great benefit to set against that, namely an exceptionally expressive and intelligent dancer to play the leading role, in the person of his wife, Vivi Flindt. At 50 she combines a maturity all too rare on the ballet stage with a supple body that enables her, when needed, to imitate a child's way of moving. She is not even upstaged by having a little girl from the Danish Royal Ballet School (Sandra Friis, aged 11) to represent some aspects of her past self. The family background comes over clearly: the somewhat anonymous mother, two teasing elder sisters, the adored and doting father, given a strong and affectionate portrait by Peter DiBonaventura. When he goes off dragging mysterious burdens with him, it is not entirely clear whether his intention is to hang or drown himself, but there is no doubt about the shattering effect of his suicide on his favourite daughter. Likewise, although her first encounters with the other two men important in her life are both shown in summary form, the relationships are made abundantly clear. Two fine Danish dancers play the roles. Peter Schaufuss drawing the arrogant and dissolute husband with economical authority, Peter Bo Bendixen showing her lover as a man whose unreliable opportunism is hidden beneath yearning earnestness.

But what really concerns Flindt is less a biography than the way the force of this woman's erotic longings drives her to draw entertainment for others from the disasters and disappointments of her own life; he escapes the literary trap by side-stepping it. The gift that comes to the woman could equally well be any kind of artistic expression. Flindt symbolises it in a Pierrot costume given to her in a kind of Faustian bargain by her imagined

Lucifer (Jacob Sparsø). Blixen wrote to her brother about the idea of such a bargain, and the title of the ballet. Lucifer's Daughter, is a description she applied to herself.

The music used is that of another Dane, Carl Nielsen. Previous use of Nielsen's scores for ballet, at least in my experience, have tended to heaviness but Torben Schousboe, who selected and arranged the pieces, has found music that is always apt and often unexpectedly bright.

The Bacchanale presaging the wom-an's epiphany could with advantage have drawn more on ethnic dance and less on the Casino de Paris: the two good dancers who lead it, Yolanda Jordan and Kevin Thomas, are better served by a comic episode earlier where the woman, arriving in Africa, discovers the folly of trying to dress her black servants in white gloves or frilly cap. Without denigrating the ballet's aim at a higher symbolism, it has to be said that the vivid and sometimes comic touches of humanity found in it by the two Flindts, author and performer, are what bring it most to life.

Yield to those sweet temptations

Jan Fabre's two London shows may overcome all the old British hostility to "live art", writes Andy Lavender

To the more cautious theatre-goer, such epithets as "avantgarde" and "live art" have a similar effect to the word "shark" on Australian bathers. They signify a horror best avoided, something Dangerous Out There. But live art. long established as a respectpursuit in Europe and elsewhere, is becoming increasingly difficult to ignore in Power of Theatrical Madness. this country.

This Saturday and Sunday a leading avant-garde director, the Belgian Jan Fabre, brings his show Sweet Temptations to the Queen Elizabeth Hall in London. He is followed next week by a new work from the intelligently eccentric Rose English. In October, Nottingham plays bost to NOW 92, a performing arts festival running in the city for six weeks, featuring leading artists from this country and abroad. And one of the more welcome arts-sponsorship initiatives of late has been Bardays funding of the New Stages awards, designed to support new performance work. All the companies on this year's shortlist are dance- or performance-orientated, rather than text-based. This, it seems, is the theatre of the future.

Of course, it is an indicament of British theatre that it is still necessary to write an article exploring live art, a term coined to embrace shows which move beyond theatre and dance conventions. It is hardly new, but Britain hasbeen slow to catch up. Practitioners such as Robert Wilson. the Wooster Group, Ariane Mnouchkine and Pina Bausch (whose company comes to Edinburgh this summer) are household names to some, nonentities to others - a symptom of the fact that Britain's theatrical establishment has largely ignored some of the most dynamic work to be produced abroad.

For the record, then, live art combines various disciplines: dance, visual arts, conventional theatre, music and new technologies. It often boasts a sardonic, post-modernist wit. It can be repetitive and banal, poignant and beautiful, spectacular and bombastic

All of which applies to Jan Fabre's work. His last show to be seen in London was The which played at the Albert Hall in 1986. It is always easy to stand agog at the apparent pretentiousness of live art. In The Power of Theatrical Madness there was a sequence in which two kings, wearing only crowns, danced a tango to Siegfried's Funeral March from Götterdämmerung; and snother in which a young woman, against a back projec tion of the painting of Amor and Psyche which hangs in the Louvre, coolly displayed her right breast to the audience. In context, however, it was received with adulation by critics, who declared it a glorious bloom of avant-garde performance

Fabre is not actually obsessed with nakedness. Sweet Temptations centres on two men in wheelchairs. They have this conversation about nature, about life, about the stars, and they ask themselves questions," he says. "The rest is really speeded daily life around them - they're given up into a party, pop concert.

street action, chaos. The chaos is provided by 14 other performers who play. amid nursery school jetsam. on a stage bounded by onearmed bandits while the music of Iggy Pop forms some kind of a soundtrack. Fabre muses about what this might mean: "The starting point for the two guys in the wheelchair was Stephen Hawking, the idea that he's such a brain but he cannot move anymore, he cannot even speak anymore. Nebody takes time to think or reflect, life is so speeded up that you cannot stop it. There's a lot of cynicism nowadays."

Fabre's Sweet Temptations: "There are meanings in it, but not one-dimensional meaning. There's an empty space for what the audience thinks"

Fabre may well be a naif. frolicking in the shallows, but a glance at the list of his forthcoming projects indicates the splash he is making. As an artist in his own right he has four separate exhibitions coming up; as a director, three theatre shows, two ballets and one opera. John Ashford, artistic director of The Place theatre, was the first to bring Fabre's work to this country when he was director of the ICA. Such is his enthusiasm that he has seen Sweet Temptations three times.

"In live art the meanings are multiple in the way in which the meanings of music or fine arr are multiple," Ashford explains. "There is a completely different story to be had from each person who looks at it. Jan's show is extraordinary. and I will always carry the images from it with me. They meant things to me which they probably don't mean to Jan Fabre or to anyone else in the audience. That's fine."

ut is it fine? One of the most consistent criticisms of live art is precisely that it is slippery: a collection of images so random that the viewer cannot get a toehold, but must stumble in an awful world where there are no proper characters, no plot, no obvious meaning and sometimes not even a recognisable ending.

"Some of this work is bad," agrees Mik Flood, director of the ICA, the venue in London which does most to promote unconventional work. But he suggests that live art demands a completely different attitude on the part of the viewer. "One should go with no preconceptions and let what happens wash over one's sensibilities. and possibly intellect too. It's often a visceral experience, to do with imagination as opposed to intellect." This might appear to be a curious demand — a complete suspension of the waking mind - but Flood has arrived at the heart of the issue. A familiar lament is that the video age has left people bereft of an attention span longer than the average television commercial, and incapable of concentrated analytic thought. Hence the rise of an art form devoted to style and image.

ways more sophisticated, able to process images very quickly and to respond intuitively rather than intellectually to a range of cultural material. If some of the shows appear glib and superficial, that may well be the point. "At times it's the artist's

intention," observes Flood drily, "to highlight those areas of shallowness that seem to predominate in aspects of our cultural life." But he points out that live art is capable of combining a thrilling modernity with a profound social vision; and Fabre, too, insists that his own work has a serious resonance. 'Sweet Temptations reflects the things I don't like," he says. "We're losing track of values. The piece reacts to that and gives a kind of hope again. So there are meanings in it, but not one-dimensional meaning. There are different metaphors and elements.

"A lot of my work is to do with an evocation of, and tribute to, the unnameable. the unspeakable, the invisible. It's not directly saying things. but I'm putting things next to one another. There's this gap. an empty space for what the audience thinks. I hope I can give the spectator an imagination, and I hope that imagination's tickled."

ARTS BRIEF

Peter's choice

BRITISH film-maker Peter Greenaway has been chosen by the Vienna Academy of Fine Arts to devise two exhibitions that will mark the Academy's 300th anniversary. In a characteristically grand and ingenious gesture. Greenaway will devote one show to "100 Objects to Represent the World": a riposte and an alternative, he says, to the American space-flight which sent a time-capsule of such objects on a limitless voyage. His other show will be of "100 Paintings Organised in Sequence": "using all manner of connecting links ... universal, eccentric, unorthodox and surprising". Both exhibitions open on October 1.

Hobbit forming

TOLKIEN fans will be pouring into the Bodleian Library in Oxford next month when the official centenary exhibition devoted to the author opens its doors. Unseen family papers, several of Tolkien's unpublished watercolours, the first map of The Lord of the Rings, an alternative beginning to The Hobbit and the original Father Christmas Letters are among 250 items to be displayed. Opening on August 18 and running until December, the exhibition is timed to coincide with a Tolkien Conference in Keble College.

WITH a show of outlandishly kitsch charm. Erasure have proved that there is life after Abba. Billing their act as "a phantasmagorical entertainment", singer Andy Bell and synthesizer maestro Vince Clarke, assisted by a large supporting cast, have created a cheerfully outre display of exhibitionist pop with faultless musicianship. Highlights include Bell's entrance astride a huge swan; the bingo game in the interval and the barebottomed dance routine of 'The Good the Bad and the Ugly". The duo's residency at Hammersmith Odeon (08) 748 4081) continues until Wednesday.

lently crafted play, in which two murderers and a bank robber are confined to a cell during a prison not, was awarded second prize in the Mobil/Royal Exchange Playwriting Competition in 1988. Note the time it has taken to mount a production and bring it to the Lyric Studio, Hammersmith though two years ago there was a production on the Edinburgh Fringe. A page in the programme is taken up with acknowledgements, and while some refer to technical advice, including the help of three lifers in Wormwood Scrubs, 30 individuals and organisations are thanked for financial support, without which "this production would not have been possible".

There may be some very good explanation for the lapse of time, but it does seem strange that no established management snapped up this thrilling play and produced it long ago. Gripping, psychologically acute and brimful of slangy dialogue of the liveliest sort, the play takes five or ten minutes before the ear becomes used to the vocal rhythms and the peppering of bank robber, has a nasal delivery that takes some getting used to. But Williams then shows himself, at 28, an expert in moving the focus of attention around his three characters, in deepening the pain and frustration of each in turn, and in slipping into the dialogue facts we think little of at the time but which reemerge to shift the plot into its

This same object Williams has wonderfully achieved, aided by Wax's fluent direction, where movement arises logically from situation, and by the engrossing performances of Donaghy. Rob Spendlove and

In two cases the reversal of fortune obliges a character to strip himself of an illusion. Craig's steely-eyed ex-paratrooper Kevin must see the disloyalty of his girl; Spend-love's distraught Derry cannot conceal the identity of the person he murdered. The intricate power struggles that force these truths into the open are beautifully achieved. Spendlove's frantic lifer is an astonishingly real performance, pathetic in his ignorance, trapped in his twisted version of the past. Donaghy's voice, hissing with rage, at the same time signals panic. I do not know why a piece of string should be attached to Kevin's cigarette lighter, but so vivid is the reality in this production that I am certain this is what a prisoner might do.

which does at least serve to trace Lennon's creative blossoming. The early-middle Beatles' songs, at the time of the Rubber Soul and Revolver albums, show a high percentage of polish and originality. A moustached and gold-braided sequence from Sergeant Pep-per confirms how rich, strange and rewarding psychedelia could be. After that it was downhill, starting with the sub-Lewis Carroll self-indulgence of the post-Epstein Magical Mystery Tour, "Brian would never have let them do that, but he was dead," Cyn-thia briskly informs us in a characteristically subtle exam-ple of updating. Yoko Ono's fluence is portrayed as divisive (and Ava de Souza looks bewildered in the part); and the uninspired dreariness of "Give Peace a Chance" and "Power to the People" emerges in all its simplistic monotony. The other Beatles are beltingly led by Karl Lornie's computers get smart enough, we will save all the time and bother of flying to Egypt on holiday by donning Virtual Reality goggles in our living rooms and escaping to Cairo in see-and-feel make-believe: the sphinx, pyramids and a Nile cruise, all in an hour. So it was inevitable that sooner or later someone would realise that we don't have enough free time to indulge in such free-time activities as watching television. Just too time-consuming when you've got War and Peace to skim over before breakfast and Egypt to see before lunch. As more hours of television are beamed and cabled into our homes, the choices became tougher. Now some relief. Last night. ITV brought us the first in a series called TV Squash, a Reader's Digest synopsis for the viewing classes. It offers a half-hour précis of a day's worth of television by parodying programmes in two-minute sketches.

We start with a spoof of breakfast television, then a morning consumer show called Out and About, a mid-than a TV dinner afternoon 1950s black-andwhite movie of the Brief Encounter variety, a kids' programme. a soap opera called The Northerners that echoes Coronation Street, a drama series called The Dining Buds of May, and . . . well. you get the picture, or at least snippets of various pictures. In between there are "news bulle-ing time, keeping in touch with Mozart and Manilow tins" of topical jokes, written in at the last minute. The sketches are well acted, without the discomfort of strapping a Dansette hi-fi to our backs. We microwave which is sometimes tricky to deliver in parody. Convincing stews in minutes that we once acting will often carry sketches let simmer for hours. When that do not survive on their script alone: on last night's showing, there isn't a weak link in the cast. Most of the jokes hit their mark, though maybe not always in the bullseye: sometimes two minutes is too long to dwell on a subject, sometimes too short. Cameo appearances by real presenters of the shows being parodied, like Anne Diamond in the breakfast television sketch, add spin to the format

TV Squash looked polished enough to make you feel that. providing the writing is sharp enough, the series will get better as it wears itself in and gets a shine on its elbows. But you can foresee a couple of technical hitches. There is already a brand of compact elevision, in test match and Wimbledon highlights. Miniaturising these might produce highlights so brief that they only register subliminally. And it is only logical for rival wags now to produce a Reader's Digest compact version of TV Squash for those of us who can't spare even half an hour, the biter bit?

JOE JOSEPH

Robin Neillands considers the French hotelier's peculiar way with bedroom wallpaper - and other entertaining eccentricities that add to the discreet charm of the hostellerie curious things about French hotels is the use they paper. In British hotels the wallpaper is usually on the walls but French hoteliers seem to regard that as typically British and conservative. When I entered my room at L'Ecu de France at Bourgueil on the Loire I found they had papered the walls, the ceiling and inside and outside all the doors and cupboards. But for the brass door handle I might be there

Then there is the little matter of electricity. The French take such a cavalier approach to electricity I can't think they really believe in it. Sockets gape, coils of wire lie in wait for the unwary, raw fittings jut from the walls and ceilings. In one hotel of the Suisse Normande the main excitement was the bare wires on the the upstairs lavatory light switch. When anyone left the bar all ears were cocked for the footsteps on the stairs, the slam of the door, the click of the lock . . . and the scream. How no one was electrocuted beats me.

What this adds up to is that French hotels are entertaining. There are the motels and the glass and concrete nightstops for the commercial traveller, but these are outweighed by the great number of privately owned and family-run hotels in the countryside and in the provincial cities. In Paris, alas, only one of the great hotels is still owned by a French family the elegant Crillon in the Place de la Concorde.

The Crillon is owned by the Taittinger family of champagne The Crillon caters for the rich and famous and provides them with whatever they want: John Travolta got married there, and when the King of Morocco arrives with his suite whole floors are cleared so that His Majesty can install his own furniture. Most people would happily settle for the Louis XV furniture and Aubusson tapestries that the hotel normally contains. but an afternoon of tea and celebrity-spotting in the Crillon is one of the lesser-known attractions of the ville lumière.

Away from Paris, the great hotels of France cluster most thickly along the Core d'Azur, where the Carlton at Cannes, the Négresco at Nice and the Colombe d'Or at St Paul de Vence are facing stiff competition from newly up-to-date but classical hotels such as the Hotel Bel Air at Cap Ferrat.

The secret weapons of the Bel Air are the marvellous gardens created by Madame Maissen, the excellent food prepared by Jean Claude Guillon and the beautiful pool run by Pierre Gruneberg, an Olympic swimming coach who can number Aristotle Onassis and Charlie Chaplin among his former pupils. A team like that is a hard act to hang.

All that accepted, there are a few golden rules. Many French hotels, before they will let a room, will insist that the guests eat in. Those seeking to eat well in a French hotel should there-fore know that, as a general rule, the smaller the number of rooms, the better the food is likely to be.

It is also advisable to avoid anywhere over-frequented by tourists. Most travellers will agree that the two most off-putting sights outside a French hotel are a host of GB plates in the car park and a wealth of metal signs around the door. Checking the room before booking in is also advisable. This is not simply to find out whether the damp and sagging bed has recently been vacated by a hippo, but because no Frenchman would dream of accepting a room without ining it first. Inspecting room first establishes the guest as street-wise and sets the tone for any future relationship. As a final tip, the pillows are in the wardrobe.

My particular delight is to find small family-run hotels in the French countryside, or tucked into coves on the coast. In recent trips these have included the Etape du Chateau at Bruniquel, a delightful hotel in a beautiful village of the Aveyron, just far enough off the too-well-beaten track to be virtually free of other foreigners, with the bonus of a magnificent castle. Normandy is full of fine small hotels but it is usually necessary to get away from the coast to find somewhere with that little extra something, though the Hostellerie St Martin at Creully behind the D-Day beaches manages to combine popularity with visitors and high culinary standards.

The numbled country of the Suisse Normande south of Caen is another area full of good hotels, of which the Auberge du Pont de Brie at Goupillières is a fine example. Further south, the Hotel du Lion Verd at Putanges-Pont-Ecrepin is well worth a stop on the road south. as is M Hary's Hotel du Chemin du Fer at Beaumont-sur-Santhe near Alencon. At the end of 1991, EIZO (UK) Ltd ran an advertisement in this publication which may have suggested that there were possible health hazards to users of computer monitors, due to the low frequency electric and magnetic radiation emitted by this kind of equipment.

EIZO (UK) Ltd has been asked by the Computer Graphics Suppliers' Association (CGSA), of which EIZO is a member, to make it clear that there is no conclusive scientific or medical evidence of a risk to health due to this kind of radiation from computer monitors. EIZO (UK) Ltd supports this view and agrees that more research is required.

EIZO (UK) Ltd acknowledges that a great deal of research and development has been carried out by manufacturers into minimising health and safety risks to users of computer monitors. Minister of health and indignation

Headline grabber or political genius? Charles Bremner

meets Bernard

ernard Kouchner, the French health minister, pulls out a ward of snapshots. "This is the car we were supposed to be travelling in," he says. A mangled mass of metal on the Kurdistan roadside is all that is left of the vehicle that was blown to pieces on July 6 a few yards from the one Dr Kouchner was in with Danielle Mitterrand, the first lady of France. "This is the engine." be shows another shot. "It was blown 150 metres."

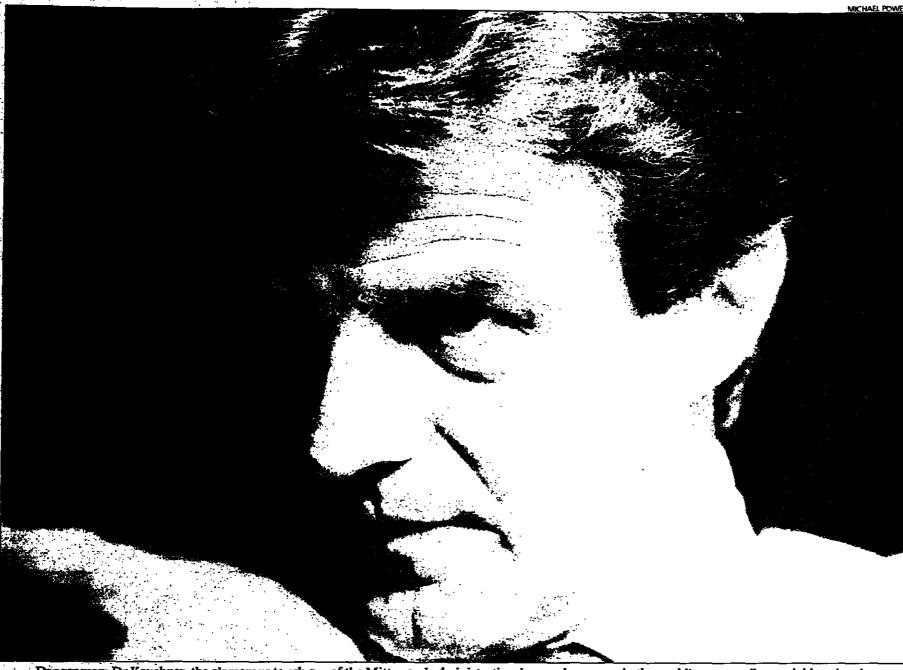

The bomb, assumed to have been planted by Baghdad, killed four people and narrowly missed Mme Mitterrand, who was on a mission to show support for the UN effort to help Kurdish refugees. The close shave, with its explosive diplomatic implications, may have sent the French government into a cold sweat but it was pretty much all in a day's work for Dr Kouchner, who in addition to holding the health job, is minister for humanitarian action and the glamorous tough-guy of the Mitterrand administ-

Only a week before his latest Kurdistan trip, he had led another Mitterrand family onting, taking the president for a Sunday stroll under the snipers' sights of Sarajevo, a jaunt which provoked admiration, envy and irritation in the chancelleries of Europe.

During the past year, Dr Kouchner has travelled more than 15 times into the combat zones of Croatia and Bosnia. Even his critics concede that the events in Kurdistan and Yugoslavia have proved a personal triumph for his drive to enshrine the duty or the right of interference as a principle of international relations. The turning point was the pass-ing of United Nations Resolution 688 last year, which broke with the old sanctity of national sovereignty and authorised the armed protection of Iraq's Kurdish minority. "For a long time, homanitarian action was treated as something for the boy scouts. Now, that's changing," Dr Kouchner says, sitting in his elegant office on the Avenue

Segur in Paris. He made as his name as the rior) - a mix of Bob Geldof, Albert Schweitzer and Che Guevara. Listening to his argument, it is easy to see how Dr Kouchner, who is aged 52 but has lost nothing of his boyish bounce, has won over presidents, ruffled his colleagues and

If the opinion polls show him to be the most popular public figure in France, it is because he is seen as a man of action and not a politician, he says. He has no time for the sectarian side of politics he holds no elective office and has no immediate plans to do so. In 1988, he failed in an attempt at a parliamentary seat in Valenciennes. der when he joined the government as a junior minister in 1988 (the moral conscience of the Mitterrand administration, said a British official at the time). Dr Kouchner proved a more able administrator than expected. The reward was his appointment to the health ministry in the government of the new prime minister Pierre Bérégovoy in April this year. "I asked for the job." Dr Kouchner says, with typical lack of modesty. "I wanted the administrative responsibility."

With its tiny budget, a quarter of that of Médecins Sans Frontières, the humanitarian action ministry had been mocked by some as a mere token. He was brought in at the time on the recommendation of Michel Rocard, the then prime minister, and long-time rival of M Mitterrand. Colleagues say it took some time for M Mitterrand to be won over by Dr Kouchner's somewhat theatrical style, an approach that could not be further from that of the diligent and discrete technocrats who populate the upper reaches of French power. Kouchner, a gastro-enterologist by training, assumed responsibility for the transfusion services which have been at the centre of the scandal over Aids. One of his first actions was to ask forgiveness from the haemophiliacs who were contaminated by the ministry's failure to safeguard the blood supply in 1985. Four senior health service officials are on trial and three members of the socialist government of the time spent a humiliating spell in the witness box last Working from the inside of a government after a career spent fighting state bureaacracies has raught him to be more tolerant and patient and "to take into account multiple interests rather than the immediate interest of a people". 'But I haven't really learnt much," he says with a twinkle and one of the arm waves that made an irritated colleague compare him to an hysterical bumblebee. "I've own heads of state for 25 years. I know them off by heart."

The machinery of government, notably the Quai d'Orsay (foreign ministry), he says, has learnt a few things from him. "I brought a new dimension to politics - humanitarian action." Dr Kouchner's appointment was given a cool welcome by the Quai, which did not take kindly to the way he marched into its territory, flouring protocol and sometimes contradicting French policy. At the United Nations, for example, a day after running the marathon of New York, he publicly denounced France's ally President Mobutu of Zaire as "a walking money-box topped off with a leapord-skin hat".

But they have since learnt to live with each other and Roland Dumas, the foreign minister, has, he says, come a long way towards his views. "They're hard to shift but they're also intelligent people." he says of the ministry.

He makes little attempt to hide s frustration over the failure of Europe to stop the fighting in Bosnia or to do more to protect the Kurds. "This theory of the sovereignty of states adds up to a blindness and murderous naivere." he says. "The right to interfere is a way of avoiding war."

How about all those charges that Dr Kouchner is really on one big media-fuelled ego trip? They have been around a long time, ever since he quarrelled with his old col-leagues at Médecins sans Frontières over his plan to send a humanitarian "boat for Vietnam" in 1979. On that project he roped in the late Jean Paul Sartre and Raymond Aron and engineered a truce between those philosophical giants. His critics dubbed the project "a boat for St Germain des Pres (the haunt of the fashionable intellectual elite)" and Dr Kouchner was forced out of the organisation. He then set up the highly successful Médecins du

he media, he says, are the key to everything, some-thing which he realised in 1968 when he did a stint with the Red Cross in Biafra and left disgusted at the organisation's rule of silence on local conditions and politics. He is perfectly aware of the justice of the charge that the media attention is tickle and shortlived and that you cannot base government policy on it. But it is also the driving force of modern democracy:

"Without the media, there's no indignation. I'm in charge of indignation. I'm the minister of indignation! We're at the end of the 20th century. If there's no indignation, there's no reaction from public opinion. Without public opinion. there's no movement among politicians. That's been disastrous for non-government organisations like Oxfam, who have worked long and hard on the ground without publicity. I want politics to be influenced by reality. When a government accepts humanitarian action, the results are fantastic."

The partnership of tomorrow, he says is of the media and humanitarian action, an idea he puts into practice given that his partner of the past few years and mother of his son is Christine Ockrent, the top French television anchorwoman.

M Mitterrand's trip to Sarajevo was a crowning moment for Dr Kouchner's theory of media power. The trip grabbed the world's attention and demonstrated French solidarity with the besieged Bosnians better than anything else could have done. The president decided to come, he says, after he proposed at a cabinet meeting that he round up 12 prominent personalities from the Community to make the journey with him, "but unfortunately Europe isn't ready for that".

What really upsets Dr Kouchner is the spirit of selfish entitlement that has come to afflict the rich Western countries. "The last time I came back from Yugoslavia and 1 saw all the truck drivers on strike, I blew my top." His mission at home. he says, is to make people understand how well off they are in comparison with the needy who inhabit so much of the world. "On one side, there's no social protection and great human warmth, that's the third world. On our side, there's great social protection and no human warmth."

Logic and the sexual revolution

ntony Grey deserves to be secretary of the Homosexual Law Reform Society (HLRS) in 1962. Five years later, 25 years ago today, the Sexual Offences Act 1967 received the Royal Assent. Mr Grey thus has a rare distinction: he ran a pressure group which wanted a progressive change in the law, and achieved it. There are few

vance. He views The act meant that homosexual acts, in private, between two conthe reduction of senting men aged 21 or over were the homosexual no longer against the law in England and Wales. Much misery age of consent to 18; believed to be in prospect for for many men was thereby ended. Mr Grey continued as secretary of the HLRS until 1970. He then next year and favoured by, among began the counselling career which he still pursues. He has thought others, the prime minister, in the profoundly and cogenity about sex.
That description does not apply to same light. "This is a socially constipated country. many people in this country either. Mr Grey has now, at the age of 64, written a book, Quest for Justice. He lives with his partner of 30 years in a semi in north London. You do not get these changes very often, and it would be a wasted opportunity if What little he is willing to say about after 25 years, all his relationship is off the record. As we got was a he explains on the first page of his three-year reducbook "Though being homosexual has affected the course of my life profoundly... I do not regard this aspect as the most important or But it would be interesting thing about me (or anyone else)." That is an encourag-ing statement to read on page 1 of a book about sexuality and the law. It tells you that in the next 300 pages you have the chance of reading some old-fashioned analysis. Mr Grey does not disappoint either in his book or in person, when he restates his written view more pithily: "if I'm gay, what the hell business is it of anybody else?"

His views and mode of expression are classically liberal: "Personal relationships, whether they are few or many, homosexual or het-erosexual, long term, short term, multiple, promiscuous, faithful or whatever are not anybody else's business as long as nobody is hurt or damaged," he says. "Sexual behaviour has nothing to do with morals in the sense of what is laid down in the Bible or by some people in a committee room. It has everything to do with ethics which is how people treat one another." Logically, therefore, Mr Grey homosexual behaviour between consenting adults, the cool arguments of Antony Grey are still pressing for liberal change institutionalised discrimination against homosex-uals, while continuing to push his libertarian belief that all statutes relating to "victimless crimes" should be repealed. He is a mixture of the very idealistic and the of the very ideaustic and the shrewdly conservative. The latter quality is perhaps responsible for the arms-length treatment he receives from the contemporary homosexual lobbyists of Outrage, who marched through London last Saturday and Stonewall the organ Saturday, and Stonewall, the group founded by actors Sir Ian McKellen and Michael Cashman. "I know jolly well", Mr Grey says, "that if there had been people with banners marching down Whitehall in 1967, we would have been less likely to get our vote." He thinks potential supporters may be alienated by headline-grabbing tactics. He can sympathise with the public celebration of sexuality beloved of Outrage stunts, as he did with the Gay Liberation Front in the early 1970s: "At the beginning of my lifetime, homosexuality was unmentionable. When the law was changed, the people who emerged were celebrating the ability to be themselves." But the snag, for Mr Grey, is that such behaviour can create "a new ghetto". He prefers to find new allies by persuasion.

That is where he is at his most effective. The arguments in favour of retaining any form of discrimination in a liberal society have to be strong. In this case, they are not. We run through them. He is sceptical of the "corruption of

That relies on a version of innocence which always equates it with ignorance and with the old corrupting the young. Often, the younger person seduces the older person and then the older man suffers." Mr Grey was "12 or 13" when he realised he was homosexual. "One knows what one is. You know by what makes you turn your head in the

Then there is the straightforwardly antihomosexual argument, as put forward by the Vatican last week. This holds that homosexuality is depraved and. therefore, discrimination against its practitioners is right and proper. The view is contradictory — "If it is so disgusting, what are they afraid of?" Mr Grey asks — and encompasses the notion of the law as a moral signature to the sort of moral signpost to the sort of behaviour society, through Parlia-ment, wants to discourage. "The law is not like a no entry sign on a one-way street," he says. "Because enforcing laws on private police, it is like the Gestapo. Homes are raided, possessions are ransacked, diaries are gone through. People really suffer." Mr Grey remembers a pathetic letter he once received from a bus driver who had been convicted of "cottaging" in a public lavatory and been sacked. "He asked: What has homosexuality got to do with driving a bus?" I still don't know the answer."

What about Aids? "That's a nonstarter in terms of social justice. There is already considerable discrimination against people with HIV. Whatever some people say, it is clear Aids is already spreading widely among heterosexuals." So you might as well argue in favour of raising the heterosexual age of consent to 21, or higher.

A further argument has more force. That is what might be called the "honest conservative" attack on homosexuality for undermining the family - the basis of society. Mr Grey sticks to his logic. "I don't think 'the family' is any need of protection. There is your family, there is my family . . . some of these familes are absolutely marvellous and life enhancing and others are sheer hell."

Any change in the law next year will depend, as it did in 1967, on the mood of MPs, in turn influenced by the mood of their constitu-ents. The 1966 election had propelled a new generation of back benchers on to both sides of the House. Mr Grey characterises them as "socially tolerant modernminded people who wanted progress. It was not a party issue. We had a solid block of 60 Tories who supported it right through." The 1992 election may well have yielded a similar crop of Conservatives whose liberality extends from the economic to the social.

Mr Grey hopes his book may influence the debate. His life will certainly be changed by it, for a while. Despite his work, he says: "Some people, my parents' friends, still don't know I'm gay. I have used this book to come out to some people, even now." He has not exactly been in the closet, but he has not chosen the dramatic, selfrevelatory "outing" advocated by some. Paradoxically, Mr Grey has spent a lifetime talking about sex. yet still remains fundamentally of the generation and the class which viewed such matters as private concerns. Which is precisely what motivated his life's work.

EHRMAN TAPESTRY KIT OFFER

A SUMMER OF ROSES

This beautiful cushion cover is based on 19th Century Berlin woolwork patterns, but it has been adapted to give the design a more contemporary feel with lighter, fresher colours and easier stitching. The roses are in three distinct colour groups: soft pink, ruby red and faded yellow. The pale damask and powdery pinks, the carnation, fire and garnet reds, and the sandy, amber and flaxen yellows of the petals all blend into the variegated greens and browns of the leaves. and this rich tapestry of colour is set on a plain ivory background. It is a classic design that will fit anywhere.

Measuring 14" x 15", it is printed in the full 24 colours on 12 holes to the inch canvas to capture the detail. 100% pure wool from the Appleton range is used and the design can be worked in either half-cross or tent stitch. The kit costs £39.95 including postage and packing, and comes complete with wool, canvas, needle and instructions. When ordering use FREEPOST - no stamp needed.

mortgagee issued an originating summons seeking relief from for-feiture in the High Court.

The landlord claimed that the court had no jurisdiction to grant the mortgagee relief from forfeiture on account of section 138(7) of the County Courts Act 1984 and also on account of section 210 of the Common Law Procedure Act

As to section 138 of the 1984 Act, it was clear that it would have been open to the mortgagee to apply for relief from forfeiture in the county court under section 138(9C), as inserted by the Administration of Justice Act 1985, within six months of the date on which the landlord recovered

However, by the time the mort-gagee made its application for relief from forfeiture, namely by the originating summons issued on February 25, 1991, the six-month time limit had long since expired and it was too late for the mortgagee to seek relief from forfeiture in the county court. It was for that reason that it sought relief from forfeiture in the High a lessee". It was common ground that the plaintiff as mortgagee was within the concept of an under-

Nevertheless, his Lordship held as a matter of ordinary language and construction that in section 138(5) and (7) "the lessee" had to be a reference to the tenant who held under the lease. Accordingly section 138(7) did not apply to the plaintiff mortgagee who was therefore not "barred from all relief due to its failure to apply for relief from forfeiture under section 138(9C). Thus there was nothing in the 1984 Act which removed the jurisdiction of the High Court from granting relief from for-feiture for the plaintiff.

In reaching that conclusion his Lordship had not overlooked the definition of "lessee" in section 140 of the 1984 Act. In his judgment, the extension of the expressions "lease" and "lessee" to under-lease and original underlessee, was to emphasise that, if the lease that was the subject of forfeiture proceedings was an under-lease then section 138 applied as much to the under-lessee in whom the underlease was or had been vested as it did to a head-lease

He drew support for that conclusion from consideration of section 146(5) of the Law of Property Act 1925 which contained similar definition of "lease" and "lessee". He would add that his view appeared to be the same as that taken by the legislature when, relief from forfeiture on the following the decision of the Court of Appeal in Di Palma v Victorian Solicitors: Hill Bailey, Bromley;

The Mortgage Corporation Ltd v Nationwide Credit Cor-Square Property Co Ltd ([1986] Ch 150), it added, by sections 55(4) and 69(5) of, and paragraph 13 of

poration Ltd Before Mr David Neuberger, QC

[Judgment July 14] Priority between two substantively unregistered charges under the Land Registration Act 1925 fol-lowed the usual principle of equi-table interests that the first in time had priority.

The entry of a notice or caution protecting the later charge against subsequent interests could not give it priority over the earlier charge, the existence of which had not been noted in the register by either notice or caution. Mr David Neuberger, OC, sitting as a deputy High Court Judge so held in a reserved judgment in the Chancery Division on the summons of The Mortgage Corporation Ltd against Nation-wide Credit Corporation Ltd. Mr David Hodge for the plaintiff; Mr Thomas Dumont for the HIS LORDSHIP said that the proceedings raised a question of priorities as between two charges over registered land. The first, in point of time, was a charge dated July 10, 1989 in favour of the

The second was a charge dated July 31, 1989 in favour of the defendant. The defendant caused that charge to be noted on the register by a notice under section 49(1) of the 1925 Act on August 14. 1989. By that date the plaintiff ad not registered its charge substantively on the register.

A charge of registered land which was not a registered charge could not be more than an equitable mortgage which was a minor interest for the purposes of the 1925 Act. That was so even if the charge was protected by a notice or No such provision applied to caution: see section 106(2) and (3). The plaintiff relied on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Barclays Bank Ltd v Taylor (1974) Ch 137) which had held that where there was a conflict between two minor interests, the ordinary rules of priority between persons having equitable interests ap so that, irrespective of the date of entry of a caution in the register, the person whose interest was first in time of creation would normally

Lord Justice Russell had said (at p147): "The caution lodged on behalf of the purchasers had no effect whatever by itself on priorities: it simply conferred on the cautioners the right to be given notice of any dealing proposed to be registered (see sections 54 and 55) so that they might have the opportunity of contending that it would be a dealing which would infringe their rights . . . The defendant sought to distinguish that case on two grounds: that the decision would have gone the other way if (1) the purchaser had registered a notice rather than a caution in respect of their contract and (2) if the purchaser had nad a mortgage rather than a contract of sale.

1 Section 52(1) of the 1925 Act provided: "A disposition by the proprietor shall take effect subject to all estates rights and claims which are protected by way of notice on the register at the date of registration or entry of notice of the disposition, but only if and in so far as such estates, rights and claims maybe valid and are not (independentity of this Act) overridden by

The defendant contended that the effect of that section was to enable one equitable charges. ranking behind an earlier chargee, to acquire priority by registering a notice in respect of his charge.

The plaintiff argued that the effect of the section was more limited, that is, that a notice protected a person with a minor interest such as an equitable morteage to the extent that it ensured that he retained priority against the owner of any subsequently granted interest.
That submission involved

epting a difference between a notice and a caution to the extent that the existence of a notice could affect subsequent priorities, whereas the existence or a country while it might give the cautioner something almost as good as a priority in practice, could not.

It seemed to his Lordship that the words of section 52(1), taken on their own, could well have the wider effect for which the defendant contended. However, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs analysis was the correct

The effect of a notice was limited to giving priority to a person who had registered the notice only in relation to interests granted sub-sequently to his interest. In other words, the effect of the registration a notice in respect of an

Priority of unregistered charges the position of the person who stered the notice in relation to the holder of any prior encumbrance but it protected the person who registered the notice against losing his priority to the grantee of a subsequent encumbrance who might otherwise achieve priority by aubstantive registration: 900 900tion

2 The defendant's second ground for distinguishing Barclay's Bank Ltd v Taylor essentially relied on section 106 which contained specific provisions whereby mortgages of registered land could be pro-tected pending substantive registration as registered charges. In his Lordship's judgment, the defendant's argument on that point was not well founded.

In the first place, section 106(2) made it clear that the status of ar istered charge protected by one of the means referred to in section 106(3) was not altered; it capable of being overridden as a minor interest.

Second, the two methods by which section 106(3) envisaged protection being effected were by notice or caution. That seemed to indicate that charges so protected enjoyed no special protection over and above any other minor interest which could be protected in either of those two ways. Accordingly, the plaintiff's charge which was first in time had priority and judgment would be given for the plaintiff.

HUGH THOMPSON

EDUCATION TIMES Top marks for 'the bac'

s A-level students continued the long wait for their results last week, almost . 1,000 British school leavers awaiting exam results were put out of their misery. They were among 25,000 young people in 63 countries who took the International Baccalaureate (the IB) this year.

Now in its 27th year, "the bac" has hardly been an overnight success. In spite of the dissatisfaction with the narrowness of A levels, voiced in all parts of the education system, only 24 schools and col-leges are offering the international Baccalaureate. A handful more will follow in the autumn. Many others would like to join the fold, but are put off by the level of organisation and expense involved. The variety which is the IB's greatest attraction demands a large sixth form and a staff with a wide range of expertise.

The two-year course for 16 to 19year-olds was designed as a balanced education suitable for students entering higher education in any part of the world. Controlled by a non-governmental organisation based in Geneva, the IB requires students to take six subjects. rather than the A-level norm of three. Half of the subjects are taken at Higher level, half at Subsidiary.

A student must take his or her own language and one other. mathematics and a science. Another category includes geography, history, economics and business studies, while the sixth subject is taken from a broader range of classical and modern languages, art, music and sciences. All students take theory of knowledge, which is a broadly philosophical course, are assessed on approved extra-curricular activity, and submit an extended essay of some 4,000 words on one of their subjects. Some 20 per cent marks are awarded for coursework. Students can achieve a maximum of 45 points, and need 24 to qualify for a diploma. Any resistance from universities has long since subsided Most IB candidates at Severagas School, in Kent, where more than a third of the 400 sixth formers choose the numbers opting for the 1B began to qualification in preference to A take off when separate classes were levels, believe that they are enhanced established, and have been growlevels, believe that they are enhancing their degree prospects. Of the ing ever since. This year's results 71 students who received their results last week, 14 have offers from Oxford or Cambridge.

Almost without exception, the Sevenoaks students consider that they have had to work harder than their A-level colleagues, but few regret their decision. Peter Winter, who is responsible for the programme, says: "There is a certain feeling of superiority, I suppose, and we do find that many of the brightest pupils opt for the 1B. Often it is the parents who need convincing because they still assume that their children need A levels for higher education."

Sevenoaks was one of the pioneers of the 1B in Britain, starting courses in 1976 with pupils taught in the same classes as A-level students. The school has a long tradition of taking foreign pupils, so the international currency of the IB held obvious attractions. The are the best the school has had, with 11 pupils getting 40 points or more and only three failing. Richard Barker, the headmaster, says: "I am a great enthusiast for the IB. Virtually no other developed country is running such a ridiculously further education colleges are beginning to agree. Malvern and Cheltenham colleges will be starting courses in September, as will Stratford College, in Warwickshire, Llandrillo College, in north Wales, and Broadgreen Community Comprehensive, in Liverpool. At least plan starts next year.

The qualification is already popular in the US and Canada, which have the biggest numbers of IB students, and growth is also strong in Australia and New Zealand. By September, more than 500 institutions worldwide will be offering the 1B. Although ministers remain adamant that A levels should be preserved as the "gold standard" of the English and Welsh education system, in Scotland the 1B is the model for a proposed reform of Highers. The Scotbac, proposed earlier this year by the Howie Committee, borrows unashamedly from the IB. adapting its principles for the Scottish system.

The IB principles are at present being tested in a curriculum audit in Geneva, to see if courses devised in the 1960s need updating in preparation for the 21st century. Pippa Leggatt, the UK director. says: "We are not looking for change for change's sake, but we are anxious to remain a vibrant and energetic organisation."

The government resists comparisons between A levels and the IB. but there is a groundswell of support for the IB in schools and universities. When Her Majesty's Inspectorate studied the programme two years ago, its report was complimentary but guarded.

Students were working in "advantageous circumstances, where the staffing resources were strong and the physical resources excellent". Syllabuses in science and mathematics did not cover as much ground as their A-level equivalents. while the wider focus of the IB made comparisons impossible in other subjects.

The inspectors conceded, however: "The students considered the IB programme as a whole to be a heavy one, but did not resent this. Indeed, they were enthusiastic about the IB, and none of them regretted having taken it."

With interest in the programme growing rapidly in Britain, Ms Leggatt is maintaining realistic ambitions. "We are not trying in any way to rival the established system, but we are providing a good alternative that fits in well with Britain's place in Europe. It is not just for geniuses, but for the well-rounded individual. The key is the motivation to keep a variety of subjects going."

Hands off my cash

t isn't every day a vicechancellor writes to me. Just Levery other day during the fund-raising season. If he misses the odd post, the gap is more than filled by letters from my old college, which is in need of contributions for its new squash court-cum-conference centre. Failing that, the head of my old school sends a letter to say that he is building a new science block, and this is my last chance to sponsor a Bunsen burner.

The only way to escape all this unsolicited mail is to follow the example of a friend of mine and leave a forwarding address in Gibraltar. There are so many fundraisers at academic institutions that Ashley House, a south London publishing company, has just launched Development in Éducation, a magazine to ca-What has happened to all these places since I left them? They were, at the time, fully solvent concerns whose books balanced. Now the bailiffs are at the door, to judge by their desperate appeals, and the liquidators are poised to seize the High Table silver. All that stands between them and the Official Receiver is any donation that I might care to make. In my day, their only financial problem was me. I was always a bit leisurely in shifting cash from my grant towards the tuition fees and bar bills. Still, I was out of the red at the end of my final term: so now I am off their fiscal back, why can't they get off mine? After all, I am not particularly solvent myself, but I don't pester my old tutor for help with my car repair bills.

Another thing that's changed over the years is me. First I was a schoolboy and an undergraduate. Then I became an Old Boy and a graduate. Now I am an alumnus. According to the dictionary, this derives from the Latin and means "foster-son". According to the fundraiser's thesaurus. it clearly means "a soft touch". Once I had friends who were Oxford graduates. Now they are 'Oxonians", which translates as "Oxford man or woman with tened as "Camshafts", but it sounds rather rude.

Still, it is a lot more polite than the greeting used on a begging letter from one of my old schools: Dear Sale," wrote the chairman of the governors in his own hand. Not the courtesy of a "Mr", or even a Christian name. The secret plan behind the surname must have been to transfer me back to the time when I was a new boy and did what I was told. The subliminal message was: "You there! Fag! Sign a cheque worth all your life savings. or you'll end up with 200

The skilled fundraiser has long ago learnt the tricks of writing begging letters. Coarse words, such as cash, should not be used since they frighten people, as does any mention of money. What his university lacks, the letter writer will say, is "flexibility" (as in ilexible friend). The reason, he will continue, is "to maintain our standards of academic excellence in both teaching and research (i.e. to spend money). If pushed, he will

margin" (even more cash). What he has in mind is a target (an extremely large sum of money) and he has set up a foundation or development trust (in other words, a large paying-in book). From us, the alumni and alumnae, he would like "support". This could be more bluntly defined as a gift, a donation, a benefaction or even, pardon his French, a cheque. Rather better is covenant", which sounds vagueh Biblical, Also, it deprives the taxman of his usual percentage and the donor feels he is actually gaining on the deal.

The really big donors receive the ultimate accolade: a mention in the next glossy begging letter tunless, of course, they pick the "no publicity" box). narrow system at 16 plus."

Other independent schools and

WHILE the debate continues over teaching methods and the shape of the curriculum in British schools, countries in Eastern Europe are turning to Britain to reform their postcommunist education systems.

Much of the work falls on the British Council, an arm's length agency of the Foreign Office, and the government's Know-How Fund, designed to offer assistance to the former communist countries. Bill Jefferson, the British Council director in Czechoslovakia, accepts that the British were slow off the mark after the Velvet Revolution of November

"There was a great expecta-tion of what the United States, Europe and Britain in particular could offer. As usual Britain responded less rapidly than anybody else. France moved in to offer the French culture, the Germans moved on the economy and investment, the Italian's tourists, and America sent plane loads of the Peace Corps." he says.

However, he believes that, unintentionally or not, the delay did allow time for Britain to deliver what the Czechs and Slovaks really wanted. Mr Jefferson arrived in Prague in September 1990 and decided that the only people who knew what was required were the universities. He set off on a two and a half week tour of the 17 leading universities and institutions in the federation.

"We needed to find out what they wanted, not just for themselves but for the country," he says. "The universities had always been the most stable elements in the federa-tion and the higher education system had always been a good one." The first decision was to form the Club of Rectors of all the higher education institutions in Czechoslovakia. Mr Jefferson was invited to join the organisation, which meets every month. The recruitment and training of English teachers was quickly established as the top priority, followed by the need to revise the curriculum and improve teaching methods. English had been taught, but not very well. and much of the material was out of date. "The flame had been kept going." Mr Jefferson says. "but much of the says. "but much of the teaching of spoken English was not good."

When the compulsory teaching of Russian ended in 1990, there was an almost insatiable demand for English teachers. One estimate puts the shortfall at 6,000. The British Council is working on a fast-track programme with the Czech ministry of education to establish new teacher training departments for English language teachers. In 1990 the British govern-ment announced a five-year programme to spend £5 million a year on English language teaching in Central and Eastern Europe, with £1.3 million going to Czechoslovakia Seven regional offices, all in accommodation provided at low rent by the local community. have already opened to provide assistance to English teachers and information on Britain, and to manage regional projects and university links. They also organise cultural events, hold the Cambridge English ex-

There are also British specialists in eight universities with a further two due in September. Mr Jefferson emphasised that these specialists were not necessarily English language teachers but would help higher education institutions to open their own British studies departments. The council makes up the difference between local rates of pay and the British equiva-

Under the communist regime the council worked from the British Embassy and contacts were limited. Exchanges were closely controlled so that by and large only those considered "safe" were able to leave the country. "The council now operates on a completely different footing." Mr Jefferson says, "trying to match the genuine needs of universities, schools, business and industry with exchanges or visits that will help them meet the needs of the new era." As a result, training placements are made in British companies and there are 28 British specialists working in the federation's technical universities. New areas of research being opened up with British help include the environment, conservation and

The British Council had enjoyed high standing among the people in Czechoslovakia before being shut down by the communists in 1950 as a dangerous and subversive org-anisation. There was, Mr Jefferson says, considerable residual goodwill for both the council and Britain. At the opening of the new British Council offices in Prague last April, a woman returned a book she had borrowed just before the closure in 1950. She was allowed to keep it.

MORE degree results are published today in this section of The Times toages 8-10). The three pages of results feature Oxford, Durham, Liverpool and Brunel universities.

From today, readers will be able to ring an information line giving the dates on which the results from universities and polytechnics have appeared. The number, 0839 111120, will operate for the next two to three months, when the results are expected to appear. Calls are charged at 36p per minute during the cheap-rate period and 48p at all other times. The message will last about a minute.

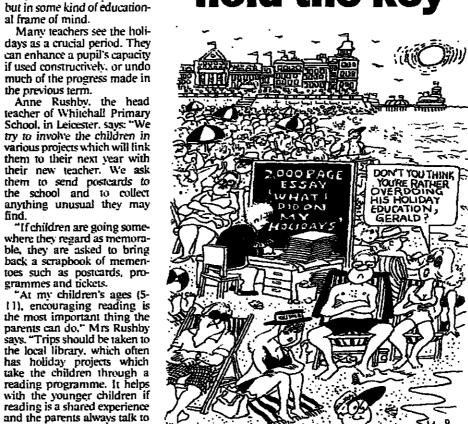

The Times is the only national newspaper planning to carry all this year's degree results. Full lists of all classes of degree at every university and polytechnic are expected to be published during July, August and September.

The following universities' results have appeared already: Open. May 25, 26, June 8; Southampton, July 13; Stirling, July 14; St Andrews, July 17; Dundee, July 20; Warwick, July 20; Loughborough, July 24. Other results will appear as they are received from universities and polytech-nics. An indication of future plans will be provided on the information line.

without reading can fall back. "For children aged over 11, the problems are far greater. not least because they have their own minds and they need facilities. For those with money, the summer is easy: you just pack them off to a summer camp. I do believe that you should allow the children to have some fun. School is school and home is home, and what goes on in the holidays is every bit as important in a child's development

"Learning to organise one's leisure is a vital life skill. Only Children who spend six weeks a few authorities provide the necessary facilities for teenagers to have the excitement they crave. I really do sympathise with parents in big cities without much money. My own solution was to find friends and relatives who lived in the country to take the children to visit. The basic philosophy for parents in the holidays must be to children to have

Steven Andrews, the head teacher of Sandringham School, a popular comprehensive in St Albans, Hertfordshire, sees the holidays as a crucial time for cementing relationships. "Parents who

going to have more influence on their child's achievements."

One big test for family ties

sons' and daughters' learning

comes with the publication of examination results. "Success and failure are important, but they are not necessarily absolute." Mr Andrews says. "Not getting the grades to go on one course means that other options have to be considered. Often I find that going on more vocational, less academic based courses is not only more suitable but in the end more rewarding.
"There is little doubt that the skills of the parents are fully stretched when it comes to convincing the sulky 14year-old that his day would be better spent if he went to the Science Museum. We are lucky in that there is a fourweek activity course based at ren join. There is quite a lot of government money available to parent-teacher assoctations to set up these

For many parents, however, the problem is not so much how to add educational value to the holidays but how to organise the childminders. Alan Dawkins has two children, aged 11 and nine, at the village school at Deer Hurst, near Gloucester. "The summer holidays are just too long," he says, "We both work and, although we have a pooling system with friends and neighbours, there are always going to be days when it breaks down. In a village like ours, there are just not the daytime holiday events which are on hand in the town. However much you try to do, the children get bored. We really should go over to four terms with shorter holidays. which would be easier for working parents to organise and one could do useful things."

£14,000 + Perks

Do you know that it is possible to go in on the tube each morning and not feel down about the lob you are going to. It is possible to work for kind, friendly people who will reward your loyalty and look after you. This small entrepreneurial family firm needs a "happy" secretary to work for them in their Kensington office. The work is not arduous but you will need 80 shorthand and 50 typing because they have the most tabulous array of business interests... from fashion icons to restaurants, from hotels to property in the Orient. This is not a demanding job but it's a lovely busy one and would give anyone confidence & a sense of belonging. If you are in your early 20's and want something to look forward to each day, call us as soon as you can!

7.30 Classic Adventure: So Near, So Far.

 CHOICE: How far do you go, when to go on means risking everything and to turn back means failure? Presenter Matt. Dickinson poses the question as we meet various adventurers who have had to make tough decisions after running into proble towards the end of their quests. The Dacron Eagles, aiming to be the first hang-gliding pilots to cross Kenya, seem particularly unlucky, who would have thought that a whirtwind would home in on a parked microlight and turn it upside down? Its tearful owner considers whether to abandon the mission even though they are just 25 miles from the end, or to stick it back together somehow... The other daredevils in the show are disabled kayak enthusiast Jim Noyes, and mountaineer, Victor Saunders, who, for the period of a

dimb, forgets he has a family. (Ceefax) (195)

8.00 Olympics Today introduced by Desmond Lynam. A re-cap of the day's events which included five gold medals in the swimming pool and one on the diving board. Other events include rowing, women's hockey and the modern pentathlor which reached the swimming and shooting stages (1824)

A woolly story: Stephen Budiansky and sheep (8.00pm)

8.00 Antenna: The Beastly Truth.

● CHOICE: Prepare to be irritated by Stephen Budiansky, an American "science writer" and part-time farmer who believes he can put us all straight about animals. You see we're all far too sentimental about them. Giant pandas may have baby-shaped faces but in fact "they are solitary, cantankerous and occasionally eat sheep". Not that the sheep should be worried, for as the argument moves on it seems that Budiansky's real point is that domestic animals shall inherit the earth unlike their wild counterparts which have not chosen such a successful evolutionary strategy. You see, they chose us as much as we chose them, the sheep that is. And so did cows, pigs, cats and dogs. So the animal rights campaigners have got it all wrong. At any rate they are not getting their hands on Budiansky's sheep. (Ceefax) (s) (5669) 8.30 Film: The Allnighter (1987) starring Susanna Hoffs and Dedee

Secret History: The Hidden Holocaust.

• CHOICE: The words "lest we forget" have never been more appropriate than in this chilling series. Tonight's programme recalls Hitler's words as he planned the Jewish Holocaust: "Who remembers the Armenians now?" He was referring to a massacre of more than 1.5 million Armenians by Turkish forces, begun in 1915. The supposed aim was deportation but the evictions were done at a moment's notice, many people were allegedly killed and those who weren't were marched into the Syrian desert. If they dicin't die first of starvation or exhaustion, they were thrown into underground caves and burnt alive, or so the few survivors relate. The Turkish government denies it happened but thousands of skeletons have been found and Armenians are demanding compensation. (Teletext) (4398) 10.00 Film: Silent Scream (1990).

 CHOICE: The channel's cheery evening's viewing continues with this unsettling film telling the true story of Larry Winters, who was convicted of murder and died in prison at the age of 34 from a drugs overdose. Inspired by one of Winters's poems, David Hayman's award-winning film is not easy to follow, but paints a powerful portrait of a man's disturbed mind as he grapples with halfucinations, troubled childhood memories and the day-to-day reality of being locked up with no possibility of parole. As Larry, lain Glen gives a tour de force performance, flitting scene by scene from nice young man to tortured soul and, most surprisingly, psychopath. His final voice-over lingers in the mind: "I am a shadow in the dark, just as a snuffed candle leaves a space where the flame was". (s) (884911)

ir Tom Cowie's story belongs in the pages of a John Braine or Alan Sillitoe novel. All the ingredients are there the humble start as a teenage mechanic in his father's motorcycle work-shop, the decades of slog, a first fortune made riding the fifties motor cyle boom, a second from a successful switch to selling cars in the sixties, and underpinning everything, a seven-decade love affair with Sunderland and the northeast of England. His favoured form of relax-ation just had to be walking on the local moors. Engine grease and motor finance agreements. have run in Tom Cowie's veins for almost 55 years. It is clearly a potent combination for at 69 he is as firmly in the driving seat of the eponymous company as ever. He may have started his business career in the depression of the thirties, but he does not intend to end it in the slump still threatening to engalf the nincties. Or rather the slump that threatens to engulf everyone else. For Tom Cowie. man and company, appear to be having a cracking good recession.

Confirmation of that will come this week, when the company reveals it has

bucked the worst car market for 50 years with a 48 per cent jump in interim profits to at least £11.5 million. Such accuracy is possible because the company has forecast the figures, as part of its hoped for next phase of growth -a £26 million bid for rival Henlys, now entering the more interesting stages of its timetable.

Then there is Kregistration day on Friday. While 'K' day and the following 30 days will be crucial to many dealers. Cowie is relaxed about the prospect with new carsales contributing only 6 per cent of the motor division's profits. Far more signficant are second-hand sales. Cynics say Cowie's revival is simply the impact of lower interest rates on its highly geared, leasing-related balance sheet. But nobody should be that surprised that Sir Tom is getting it right. After all, he has had much practice.

Coleridge expected to nominate Rowland as successor to insurance market chairmanship

DAVID Coleridge is expected to tell an extraordinary meeting of Lloyd's names this morning that he will not be standing for reelection as chairman for a third year. His anticipated move will come at a meeting requisi-tioned by angry Lloyd's names to seek a vote of no confidence in the chairman and the Council of Lloyd's. But the mass of dissident Lloyd's names are unlikely to be happy with his nominated successor, David Rowland, chairman and chief executive of Sedgwick, the insurance broker. Mr Rowland was head of the task force commissioned by Mr Coleridge that earlier this year proposed dras-tic reform of the 300-year-old insurance market. The task force proposals were later endorsed by the report drawn up by Sir Jeremy Morse, chairman of Lloyds Bank Mr Rowland earned the respect of the insurance world by turning round the troubled Stewart Wrightson broking group in the seventies and then merging it with Willis Faber in 1987.

Mr Rowland will have to be nominated to the council next month then approved by a ballot of Lloyd's membership in October. Only working names, underwriters who also work at Lloyd's, can vote, shutting out many of the dissatisfied names who have lost heavily in the past few years. In December, the new chairman will be nominated

the first salaried chairman of Lloyd's and would be expected. to earn about £400,000 a year. against the near £500,000 he collects at Sedgwick.

A flavour of Mr Rowland's intentions can be gleaned from his task force's report. It aimed to strengthen the capital base, cut costs, improve competitiveness and increase Lloyd's share of the international market. But the proposals did little to relieve names who had-borne the brunt of the market's losses. Mr Rowland's report included a proposal to end unlimited liability for names, thereby limiting future losses.

Tom Benyon, chairman of the Society of Names, said of the potential Rowland appointment "No disrespect to him, he is a fine man but the appointment would be seen as 'croneyism'. He won't command the support of dissident Lloyd's names. It is not going to be easy but surely it would be possible to find someone of stature who is seen to be "I think Coleridge has done a good job. He has picked up an awful fot of blame for people in the past. He just happened to be there when the parcel was passed to him. He has done his job honourably." The EGM Initiative group, which called this morning's meeting, said of the Coleridge move: There is no way one man's gesture ... can be expected to have any substan-

headed by Claude Gurney,

today and is hopeful of winning its motions in the postal votes that take place after the meeting. The result will not be known for a month. EGM Initiative is likely to press in the long term for compensa-tion for the loss-suffering names.

It is only a month since Mr Coleridge faced a hostile sixhour annual meeting of 5,200 names at Lloyd's. He described the record loss of £2.06 billion for the latest Lloyd's accounting year, 1989, as "one of the darker chapters in the long history of our society". His polite handling of the meeting under severe pressure drew praise from many. He is expected to continue as chairman of Sturge, the largest quoted

At Sedgwick, Saxon Riley the present managing direc-tor, is expected to take over as chief executive and a search will be made for a new chairman

Postal votes will test support for dissident names

LLOYD'S insiders fear that the postal ballot after this morning's extraordinary meeting of names might produce a vote against the planned £500 million levy to secure the market's solvency.

The vote is a crucial test of the support for dissident Lloyd's names among the market's membership as a whole. The meeting will disrupt underwriting at Lloyd's for the second time in less than a month, after the annual meeting in June.

Votes will be taken on five motions, one expressing confidence in the Council of Lloyd's and four calling for radical changes. The meeting was requisitioned by a small group, EGM Initiative, which tabled the critical motions. The most controversial levy announced on June 3. The levy is aimed at doubling the size of Lloyd's central fund. Some hard-hit names resent a further cash call on top of their underwriting losses. Lloyd's insists the levy is needed to avoid difficulties with the DTI over solvency later in the year.

There is concern in the market that names will reject the levy without taking an informed view of the wider implications and the wider context of Lloyd's", according to one insider.

The possibility of a majority for the motion on the levy is increased by the large number of disaffected names who have ceased underwriting but are still entitled to vote because they are trapped on open years. Non-underwriting names make up a third of the 33,000 with votes. It is feared they might feel less responsibility for the market's future. David Coleridge, Lloyd's chairman, has written to every name on the electoral roll urging support for the motion of confidence, which is being proposed by the Association of Lloyd's Members, and against three of the four EGM Initiative motions. The fourth, a metion on council members' financial interests, is irrelevant, Mr Coleridge says. The votes are not binding on the council but any vote against its recommendations would be embarrassing and increase pressure for reform. The ballot is being organised by the Electoral Reform Society and the results will not be known until towards the end of next month. form of a series of short debates on each of the motions. The 6.000 working members of Lloyd's are expected to turn up in force to give support to Mr Coleridge and the council.

Claude Gurney, chairman of the EGM Initiative, said he had received calls from about 800 names, of whom 99 per cent had been supportive. "I than 500 are there supporting," he said. Mr Gurney said he expected about 5,000 names to vote for the critical He was critical of the way the EGM had been organised, and especially of Lloyd's resistance to his request to distinguish between the votes working and external names. Substantial majorities for the EGM Initiative's motions among external members would carry "immense moral authority, he

Mr Gurney was also critical of the five-minute limit imposed by Lloyd's on speeches proposing the motions. "David Coleridge had five hours to speak at the AGM and nobody interrupted him," he said. The preamble to the EGM

the council of Lloyd's has failed properly to manage and superintend the market and calls for the council's entire membership to be replaced. As well as the motion on the levy, there are others demanding closure of all open years by the end of the year, the full disclosure of all interests in Lloyd's agency and broking firms by council members. and full co-operation by the council with all groups representing names.

The motion from the Association of Lloyd's Members expresses confidence in the council. It asks for full implementation of the Rowland Task Force recommendations 'without delay" and encouragement of a contribution from the market towards a fund alleviating the hardship of distressed names.

Wellcome offer may have raised £2.2bn

Trust medical charitable foundation were last night still calculating the details of the price and scaling-down of the offer for shares in Wellcome. The offer is believed to have raised nearly £2.2 billion. Sources suggested the shares would be sold at 800p, the minimum level the trust set

Japanese discount rate cut expected

By Our Economics Correspondent

THE Bank of Japan is expect-ed to cut its official discount rate either today or tomorrow, by a half point to 3.25 per cent to counter the slowdown in the real economy and rebuild confidence in the troubled financial markets.

Although officials had said that Friday's emergency cabi-net meeting to discuss the measures had not included any move on monetary policy, government sources made clear over the weekend that the discount rate would be lowered early this week. The central bank's board, which has resisted government pressure to ease the monetary reins, is expected to meet today. A cut to 3.25 per cent would take the official discount rate to its lowest since exchange plunged to a six-year low on Friday, fuelling concern about a financial meltdown accompanied by a full-blown recession. The cabinet agreed to put together by mid-September a package of fiscal measures aimed at boosting the economy. No direct measures to support the financial markets were agreed. Agreement on a new public spending package follows similar measures that were widely considered inadequate. On March 31 and April 1, the government announced an emergency fiscal programme. which was accompanied by a cut of three quarters of a point in the official discount rate. THE Confederation of British Industry's latest survey, out tomorrow, is likely to deepen the gloom about the prospects for recovery this year and prompt renewed

The quarterly industrial trends survey is understood to show that after the encouraging signs of a gradual upturn after the election, business confidence has fallen sharply.

A CBI report last week showed that the post-election lift in retail sales had fizzled out. In its previous quarterly industrial trends report, the CBI identified a sharp improvement in optimism among manufacturers. However, more firms are now less optimistic about economic conditions than are more optimistic. Most recent data have suggested that the economy is, at best, flat and possibly faces a fresh lurch down. Many City economists have revised their forecasts to show another year of economic contraction this year. The official Treasury forecast remains 1 per cent growth. Norman Lamont, the Chancellor, yesterday rejected the suggestion that Britain faced a slump. Interviewed on BBC Radio 4, he said recovery would come, albeit "gradually". He said: "We always said recovery would be very jagged, that we would get good statistics and bad statistics." Official uncertainty about underlying economic growth and the impact of lower tax receipts on the government's deterio-rating finances, are highlighted in the latest Treasury Bulletin, published at the weekend. It follows the unveiling last week of a tough government policy to tighten control of public spending. The new policy, the most sweeping attempt for a decade to curb the public sector borrowing requirement (PSBR), foresees increases in spending over the next three years at a rate below that of economic between 2 and 2.5 per cent a year, broadly the same as the 2.25 per cent achieved between the "supply-side mir-acle" years between 1979 and 1989. But the bulletin shows that the underlying growth trend is still weaker than the 3.5 per cent a year between 1960 and 1973. The bulletin says that output per head in Britain's factories remains 25 per cent lower than in Germany and France.

Given the continuing productivity gains in other economies, Treasury officials said it was near-impossible to predict how long it would take Britain to catch up. A warning was also given that the strong growth in corporation tax receipts during the late 1980s reflected a range of factors unlikely to be repeated in coming years. Treasury economists ex-pect that economic recovery will not be reflected immediately in corporation tax receipts. Furthermore, the 1989-90 peak was exceptionally high at 4 per cent of the gross domestic product.

TransAtlantic to seek listing on London exchange

By COLIN CAMPBELL

TRANSATLANTIC Holdings, the life assurance and property group in which Liberty Life group, of South Africa, and UAP Group, France's largest insurer, are dominant shareholders, is seeking a London stock exchange listing with effect from TransAtlantic's interests include 100 per cent of Capital & Counties and 50 per cent of Sun Life Holdings — in which UAP holds the balance - and is expected to command a market capitalisation of between £600 million and £700 million on listing.

The shares will be listed in the life insurance sector and analysts expect an opening price of between 180p and 190p a share, depending on market conditions.

TransAtlantic was established in Britain in 1980 and has been quoted on the Luxembourg stock exchange since

Donald Gordon, the chairman, said the object of seeking a listing in London was to obtain a more liquid market in

SMALLER COMPANIES

Benson offers good growth potential

THERE has hardly been a dull moment at Benson Group since the appointment of Richard Phillips as chairman two years ago.

Despite the severe recession, the specialist engineering company has completed a remarkable turnround, moving from losses into profit and assembling a portfolio of businesses with growth potential.

Mr Phillips took over in May 1990 with the support of institutional investors. Significant rationalisation and reorganisation has since taken place, followed by acquisitions to expand core business. The acquisition of complementary underperforming assets cheaply for cash has, in many ways, been assisted by the recession and the City has funded larger deals. In February Benson raised £6.65 million via a placing and open offer to fund the acquisition of subsidiaries of Thama Holdings engaged in manufacturing pressed metal components, and of Pakaway Perrymatics, a manufacturer and distributor of heaters and boilers. At the same time Benson promised shareholders their first dividend since 1990, albeit a nominal payment of 0.1p a share, as an indication of the company's confidence.

Shareholders have reason to be pleased. Benson shares have more than doubled to 16p, hitting a high of 22p in May when sentiment towards smaller companies was more favourable, and the market capitalisation has risen from £3 million to £20 million. Losses of £3.7 million before tax in 1990 are a distant memory. The next results are expected to show pre-tax profits of £900,000 in the year to the end of May and analysts believe Benson can earn £2.6

Pakaway's sales team significantly strengthened Benson's position in industrial heaters, giving the group a market share of 20 per cent in Britain. The Thama businesses have proved resilient in the recession, achieving 11 per cent net margins before non-recurring items. Throughout the turmoil in the European bond markets — the Danish "no" vote and the discount rate rise in Germany — gilts have performed remarkably well, es pecially compared with French government bonds (OATs). On an annualised basis, a ten-year gilt last week yielded 9.3 per cent, com-pared with 9 per cent for an OAT. Yet inflation in France is I per cent lower and the budget deficit is less than half the size of Britain's. Moreover, there can be no doubting the French government's commitment to the ERM, the franc is very competitive and the economy does not need a devaluation. Indeed, a case can be made for a franc revaluation. Changes in ten-year bond yields since the referendum in Denmark (June 2) are (in basis points):

IJΚ Germany Netherlands Denmark Italy Spain Ecu

French referendum Maastricht might be one explanation for the underperformance of the OAT market. However, a rejection there would be the death knell for Maastricht and as damaging, if not more so, for gilts as for the OAT. Another possibility is that the markets are becoming worried about the National Assembly elections next spring, but this seems questionable, as a change in government vould not lead to significant changes in economic policy. We think the out-performance by gilts results mainly from heavy buying by do-mestic investors who fear a prolonged recession. Actuarial considerations are also leading institutional investors to switch into gilts, given the poor returns on equities over the past five years. For these domestic investors, the devaluation risk is less of a problem, since their liabilities are in sterling. Even so, devaluation would push up inflation and cannot be completely ignored.

ity has heightened in Italy and Spain (where rates have already risen) and also in France. It has not risen in Britairi. The markets reason that the British government cannot afford to raise rates. There has, in contrast, been a sharp increase in the volatility of sterling. The pound is, in effect, being left to take the strain, which suits the British authorities. Thus the gilt-edged marcake and earing it the government says it will keep the pound strong and yet there are no worries that base rates will rise. Mr Lamont is either very skilful in achieving this balance or just very lucky. In contrast, the French government's ERM commitment retains credibility, because the markets believe the Bank of France really would push up rates if the franc came under pressure.

It needs only one of five developments to go "wrong" over the next few months and Mr Lamont's luck will run out the Bundesbank could push up the lombard rate; the French could vote "no": Maastricht ratification could be halted in Germany or Britain; the dollar could fall further, intensifying ERM tensions; the economy might sink further into recession, causing more unrest in the Conservative party. Even without any of these disasters, the pound may well trade lower inside the ERM, testing the floor.

How would the British government respond if the floor were breached? Politically, it cannot devalue; economically, it cannot push up interest rates. In any case, either action would probably backfire: a devaluation might cause rates to rise because of the loss of credibility; a base rate increase might weaken the pound as the markets considered the implications for the real economy. On the fiscal front. the government is equally concerned. The gilts market liked last week's announcement of new controls on public spending. However, this will weaken growth even more and will not remove the sword of Damocles hanging over the pound.

Given all this, gilts do not have a big enough risk premium built into them. In the worst-case scenario of the ERM falling apart, the pound would plummet However, the franc would appreciate. The message is clear: for little loss in yield, risk can be dramatically reduced by buying French

Rowland in line for the toughest task

The expected decision by David Coleridge today nor to seek re-election as chairman of Lloyd's and to monimate David Rowland as his successor has long been numoured in the insurance marker. To many conside observers of Lloyd's the move makes excellent sense. The Rowland task force made many recommendations to drag the insurance marker, albeit kicking and screaming, into the 21st

Mr Rowland faces a six-month-long passage into the chairmanship which could be made difficult by names. But only working names vote in the ballot for council membership, not the outsiders who have come off worst in the recent space of woes. It is a pity that Mr Coleridge will appear to be making the announcement under the pressure of a special meeting called by dissident Lloyd's names to vote on a motion of no-confidence in the ruling Lloyd's council. Mr Coleridge has had to suffer criticism for many acts in the dim and distant past that were not of his making and as recently as last month's annual meeting was seen to be taking it all with good grace. At least his successor is to be paid the full commercial rate for doing what is unquestionably one of the most difficult jobs the City has to offer. Despite the distractions of press and parliament, Mr Coleridge has commissioned the Rowland task force and two reports looking at the future of Lloyd's and, as he himself has pointed out, the £2.06 billion loss Lloyd's declared for 1989 is barely a record when expressed in real terms.

Although the names will doubtless enjoy the feeling of having called for Mr. Coleridge's head and won it, the outcome of any vote is in many ways academic. The result of the full poll will not be known for a month and is not binding on the council of Lloyd's. But it will give an important measure of how much support the loss-making Lloyd's names can command. A number of pressure groups have sprung up around the syndicates facing huge losses associated with the vicious downturn in the insurance underwriting cycle over the past few years. Most of the losses have been concentrated within relatively few high-risk syndicates.

The dissident EGM Initiative group, if it wins, says it will be pressing for the interests of all Lloyd's names, for which read compensation for all the losssufferers. The dissidents say the Rowland report made some good points but that it was not the last word, especially on regulation.

Some letting off of steam will do little harm. But of the five resolutions to be put to the special meeting this morning the most telling concerns the vote on the recent levy on names. A vote to undo the recent and much criticised levy has the potential for

To names already guaranteed severe hardship through their losses, an additional 1.66 per cent levy was a mere addition of insult to injury. But the additional cash would boost Lloyd's central fund to around £1,000 million and ensure that confidence in Lloyd's ability to meet its claims is not in question. This motion is attractive to those hardest hit, who will see it as a vote against throwing good money after bad. What person dying of thirst will not vote for an oasis even if it proves to be a mirage?

Lloyd's has to pass the trade department solvency examination this autumn. Although the market authorities are convinced there will be no failure, the fact that the question is considered is hardly reassuring to those seeking insurance cover. The levy would render the solvency examination a formality. It is good for Lloyd's ability to compete with other markets and would allow the debate over Lloyd's future governance and regulation to continue free from the shadow of a financial crisis. The motion against the levy must be defeated by a substantial ECONOMIC VIEW

Europe's economies buckle under the burden of a strong mark

Germany acts as if its economic policy were its own affair. Europe's system of exchange rates

magine John Major as president of the EC Council of Ministers summoning Chancellor Kohl to a meeting. The pur-pose to tell the Chancellor that unless Germany follows policies that will lead to lower interest rates, the mark will be expelled from the European exchange-rate mechanism. It might be fun to be the bi-lingual fly on the wall.

Absurd, perhaps. Politically impossible, of course, at present. But it makes economic sense. And understanding why is a useful guide to the changes necessary in Europe-

The most fundamental point is that the European exchange rate problem is a mark problem, not a sterling or a franc problem. The Ital-ium have inflation and budget deficit difficulties of their own, which have resulted in 17 per cent interest rates.

Since the beginning of May, the mark has appreciated by 12 per cent against the dollar and 5 per cent against the yen. The reason for the mark's strength is the perverse combination of the foreign exchange market's confidence in the Bundesbank's long term det-ermination to half inflation and high short-term interest rates since unification. The short-term German Euro-currency rate is 9.75 per cent, compared with rates outside Europe of 3.25 per cent, 4.5 per cent and 2.25 per cent for the dollar, yen and Singapore

The high German shortterm interest rates result from tion, combined with the unwillingness, so far, of the German government to fund these costs from tax increases or cuts in other expenditure. The BDI (German industrial federation) estimates that unification will cost DM 200 billion a year to 1995, compared with the federal government's preunification estimate of about a fifth of that. They estimate that on a UK basis (including offbalance sheet items) this is causing the equivalent of a public sector borrowing re-quirement of more than 6 per cent of GNP.

This fiscal stimulus has led to broad money growth of 10 per cent and inflation of more than 4 per cent - hence the Bundesbank's determination to keep interest rates high. The federal government has now adopted a budget for 1993 aimed at holding spending growth down to 2 per cent. Many commentators are sceptical about whether the detailed policies necessary to achieve this objective will be implemented. If the government fails, it is probable that German interest rates could remain over 8 per cent until the mid-1990s.

German unification was a one-off and was bound to create economic indigestion. Hindsight suggests that a less generous deal for the former East Germans and an understanding by the West Germans that the price of unification would be lower takehome pay would have made the problems less severe. But there would still have been difficulties and, in the circumstances, high interest rates and an appreciating currency are unsurprising. In time, both should fall back, though this may take years.

The spillover to the rest of Europe emerges from the premature solidification of the European Monetary System. The ERM was designed to allow exchange rates to be Berible within the wider and nerrow bands) and to adjust.

Under the Massricht concurrency, defined as an end to exchange rate adjustments, was only required to emerge in the last two years before economic and monetary union in 1997 or 1999. Instead, there has been a creeping single currency emerging since 1987 when the French adopted the "franc fort" policy.

The problem with this premature solidification is that it means interest rates are effectively set by the monetary policy cent. Instead, they are both 10 per cent. In a year's time, with continued sluggish growth and falling inflation, the appropriate rates in both countries based on domestic circumstances alone might have been 4 to 5 per cent, whereas in practice they may remain as high as 9 per cent.

These higher-than-neces- would almost certainly make sary interest rates are causing life difficult. They would de-

Europe. The greatest effect is in Britain, where high interest rates are exacerbating the problems of debt deflation to cause a prolonged slump. Few forecasters are now brave enough to give a confident prediction of when it might end. If the British or any other European government were to take unilateral steps to move out of this quagmire, the foreign exchange markets mand some indication of toughness and willingness to accept economic pain.

The prerequisite for any attempt to solve the European economic problem is realism. to accept that, in effect, they already have a fixed exchange rate system. They can either break this system or start to manage their economies to fit the system that has emerged.

Running a de facto fixed European exchange rate system means fiscal and monetary policies in each country are a legitimate matter for ioint scrutiny and man-agement. In particular, Ger-man policies need to be assessed for their effect on the whole European economy, not just Germany. If this were done, the prescription would be cutting German public sector borrowing and setting German interest rates at levels that would achieve European inflation targets.

f German economic policy were to be Europeanised in this way, Eurointerest rates would be lower, perhaps by as much as three percentage points by 1993.

This may seem a pipedream, but it reflects a clear economic logic. In practice, European governments negotiate about most other aspects of their policies, trading off things they do not want to do against things they want other governments to do.

In extremis, it would be open to the European economies other than Germany to decide to match one another's exchange rates, rather than the mark, provided they made the project credible by adopting dear monetary targets and, probably, independent central banks. The French and, perhaps, the Dutch, would need to take the lead, having more plausible economic track records than some other countries.

So an ERM without the mark? Still far-fetched, but perhaps not entirely absurd.

This holds out the delightful prospect of se-nior tax officials occupying office space made poss only by enormous tax breaks in the Docklands enterprise zone. A high ranking Inland Revenue mandarin confirms that the staff at Somerse House, who include key supervisory officials, have been surveyed twice on their views over a move as part of the prime minister's remit to relocate civil servants. So far, the remit has been thought to extend mainly to the environment department and parts of the trade and industry department. About 850 Revenue staff are based at Somerset House and Michael Heseltine, the trade secretary, has iong made comments that the building is wasted on bureaucrats. The present Somerset House was designed as an Inland Revenue building, but in a lecture last December. Heseltine said he would "relocate any government staff now there" if "some imaginative public use that will add further justre to the City" could be found for the building. Although the bulk of Revenue administration is scheduled to move to Nottingham, about 1,000 civil servants will remain in Somerset House or in

SOME executives have already found ways of turning to their advantage Sir Adrian Cadbury's recommendations on corporate governance. One such is Stephen Barker, the high profile chairman of Hartstone, the fast growing hosiery and leather goods firm, which has received much flak, not least on account of Barker's former role as chief executive of fallen star Albert Fisher. Barker recently invited shareholders to send him written questions about Hartstone along the lines that the Cadbury committee suggests. The answers have just been sent to shareholders and Barker admits that "part of the reason" for the question and answer session was to create the opportunity to restore Hartstone's dented image. The exercise gave Barker the chance to respond to several leading questions such as whether Hartstone is a "one man band" company. "I have always expressed my disap-proval of the idea and the practice of one man band management." Barker replied smoothly before detailing his well rounded team. Many of the questions appear to have the air of being pure spoonfeeding, devised by a company public relations officer. However, Barker insists that they are completely genuine. "I can give you the names and addresses of all the shareholders who wrote to the," he says.

Man wanted

WOMEN in the developing countries have a lot of friends in the right places these days to judge by the high-powered gathering of City women who met last week on the 30th floor of Canary Wharf for the summer party of Womankind. The organisation supports women in projects in the Third World and among the guests were Baroness Chalker. minister for overseas development, who ventured that women in the Third World often make "better economic planners than men - they don't want to be instant milhonaires". A little ironically. therefore, one of the key talking points of the evening was Womankind's search for a man to sit on its board now that Alec Reed, of Reed Employment, which has backed the organisation for three years, has stepped down. Pranial Sheth, a former director of Abbey Life, is now the only man among eight trust-ees, which even the women feel is imbalanced. Lady Morris of Kenwood, a consultant partner at Paisner & Co. the solicitor, is clear about what is required. "We want a man who is a man and not a mouse," she says. "One who can face up to a board of high powered women and who can

TIB-loid press THE launch of another tabloid would normally send tremors through the Press Complaints Commission but one that should not cause the moral watchdogs too much concern is The International Broker, a financial weekly that is being taken by an increasing number of City research houses. The paper, which, it must be said, bears a remarkable resemblance to Barrons, the well known American weekly, is the brainchild of Mahesh Kumar, 39, and Bostonian Richard Furber, 43, ex-Dean Witter and, until March, head of European sales at Lehman Brothers. Unlike Barrons, TIB does not list share prices. "It's a cross between journalism and re-search," Furber says. Its "bitesize" reports aim to provide consistent updates on world markets less dense than those in, say, The Economist. The editor is John Roberts, former editor of Radio 4's The Financial World Tonight and onetime City editor of the Daily Express. Furber says that firms such as Merrill Lynch have been snapping up ten copies a week and that two publishers have already made offers for the title since its launch 12 weeks ago. Furber, Kumar and Roberts, who provided the start-up cash, believe they can do better by hanging on. "We may go public," Furber says, "but we wouldn't sell to another newspaper."

Fourie finds his feet to steady surge for title

vived an attack of nerves on the homeward stretch to win the British Seniors' Open with a wonderful final round of 69 at Royal Lytham and St

The South African earned the first prize of £33,330 with a total of 282, two under par, three shots clear of Neil Coles and Bob Charles, of New Zealand, who both scored 73.

Fourie appeared to be in command with six holes to play, leading by four shots. Then he faltered, in much the same way as Nick Faldo had a week earlier in the Open. dropping three shots in succession to leave Charles only one shot behind.

"I just told myself that Nick Faldo had the Open in the bag, let it go but got it back again," Fourie, aged 52, said.
"But I can't believe that I've won. I'm floating on air."

Fourie, the club professional at Pretoria West, won the Callers of Newcastle tournament on the PGA European Tour in 1977 but, two years later, ceased to compete outside of South Africa.

"My friends at home kept telling me I was good enough to come back here and play but I honestly didn't believe I could play this well," he said. "It has given me so much confidence I shall attempt to get a few invitations to play on the US Seniors Tour next year."

Fourie set out under heavy skies but, as the rain gave way to sunshine, so he made relentless progress. He putted well throughout the week and holed from 14 feet on the first green for a two. Then be iropoed shots at the 3rd and 4th but recovered with a two at the 5th, where he hit a fiveiron to three feet from the hole, Another good putt of 15 feet for a birdie at the 8th took hint to the turn in 34.

Coles and Charles, who share the halfway lead, were out in 36 and 37 respectively but Arnold Palmer and Peter

hill putt for a birdie on the JOHN Fourie yesterday sur- Butler were hard on the heels of Fourie. Palmer had twos at the 5th and 9th to give his gallery of approximately 1,000 hope that he would launch a charge. Meanwhile Butler made a two at the 5th in a flawiess outward half of 34. Fourie, however, forged in front with a putt of ten feet for a birdie at the 10th and a delightful pitch to within eight feet for another at the next Then he stretched his lead with an uphill putt of fully 30 feet at the 12th for his third two of the round.

Ahead of him, both Palmer and Butler began to falter but Charles, playing behind, made a good putt for a birdle at the 11th. The pressure of leading showed as Fourie lost his rhythm.

Fourie put himself in trouble with wayward drives at the 13th, 14th and 15th holes. He dropped one shot at each. though it might have been two at the 15th, where he scuffed his third. Instead, he pitched to three feet and holed.

His tee shot with a threewood at the 16th was struck so well that he was left with a little sand-iron, which he hit to 12 feet, Fourie emphasised the importance of holing out with confidence by coaxing not only that putt home but another from a similar length to save par at the 17th. He made a cast iron four at the

Neither Charles nor Coles could make an impression and Palmer retreated by following a seven at the 14th, where he left the ball in a bunker, with a six at the 17th. it opened the door for Butler, one of three people Fourie beat in a play-off for the Callers tournament 15 years ago, to take fourth place on his own with a 73 for 286.

Michael Noon the club member who led at the halfway stage, slipped back with an 82 but had the added bonus of playing the last round with Palmer.

Drive for victory: Pamela Wright, of Scotland, trailed by four shots after three rounds of the US Women's Open at Oakmont

FROM PATRICIA DAVIES IN PITTSBURGH

JULI Inkster and Patty Sheehan have been friends and rivals since their days at San Jose State University in California. They have won 43 tournaments between them since turning professional and yesterday at Oakmont, weather permitting, they were to do battle for the biggest prize of all: the US Women's Open championship. Neither Sheehan nor Inkster has won an Open. The latter has not even come close. She missed the cut last year and the year before, for instance. The former, however, has been second three times; to Jan Stephenson, of Australia, in 1983; to Liselotte Neumann, of Sweden, in 1988 and, most agonisingly of all, to Betsy King, a fellow-American, in 1990.

That was in Atlanta, when the weather was even more disruptive than it has been here, and 36 holes were crammed into the last day. At one stage Sheehan led King by 12 strokes but ended up losing by one after rounds of 75 and 76. Some people thought she might never recover and she herself is never sure if she can exorcise her demons altogether. "The golf demons always try to play, havoc with my brain at night," she said, after her third round on Saturday, "and perhaps I'll bring my cross with me. But I'd rather be tied for the lead than nine shots in front."

Sheehan, who had a round of 70, one under par, on Saturday, and Inkster, who had 71, were the only players under par on monstrous Oakmont. They were on 211, two under, three shots ahead of a north American trio of Gail Graham, Donna Andrews and Dawn Coe. A further shot behind, on 215, two over, were Michelle McGann, an engaging, big-hitting American, and Pamela Wright, of Scotland.

Wright had been three under par and the outright leader at the halfway stage after rounds of 70 and 69, one

Relieved Steven returns to Rangers

By OUR SPORTS STAFF

TREVOR Steven's summer of end tomorrow when he completes a £2.4 million move from Marseilles, the French champions, back to the Scotland's leading club, Rangers.

The move will return Steven to the club he left to join Marseilles just 12 months ago and, since the fee then was a British record-equalling £5.5 million, it also represents a £3 million profit on the player for Rangers.

Told by Marseilles that he no longer figured in their plans for the future, Steven has been spent the close season awaiting news of a move. only for long-standing disputes with Marseilles about money Steven alleged was owed to him to get in the way. Last week, Leeds United pulled out of a deal because of financial complications and instead spent £2 million on the Arsenal midfield player. David Rocastle.

Rangers, however, quickly stepped in and negotiations with Bernard Tapie, the Marseilles dub president, have been spectacularly successful - so much so that the two clubs are said to have developed a "closer relationship" and will play each other in future on a regular basis. Indeed, Steven, aged 28, may make his reappearance for Rangers in a friendly with Marseilles at Ibrox tomorrow.

Ray Houghton, the Liver-pool midfield player, is to join Aston Villa for £900.000. Houghton, aged 30, opted to move to the midlands instead of Chelsea, who were also keen to sign him. Houghton's departure from Antield is likely to signal the arrival of Paul Hotspur for a fee of around £2.3 million. Shearer to move for £3.4 million

ALAN Shearer will complete his British record £3.4 million move from Southampton to Blackburn Rovers today and is expected to make his debut for his new dub this evening in a pre-season exhibition with Hibernian, the Scottish club. Shearer, aged 21, accepted the terms of a four-year contract with Blackburn over the weekend after talks with the club's manager, Kenny Dalglish.

While Shearer was heading north, David Speedie moved south to Southampton from Blackburn in a £400.000 deal. Speedie had, at one stage, turned down the transfer to the south coast club, but then reconsidered. Shearer's transfer has wiped out any financial problems at Southampton. which had, at one stage, seen them £1.5 million in debt.

Hinkle, whose last victory came in 1979, had an adventurous round for a 66 that left him two shots off the lead at 11-under for the tournament. Phil Mickelson, the left-hander, kept himself within striking distance with a

Most of the players who started the day in contention were still challenging after 54 holes. Only two of the top 12 players after the first two rounds were over par on Saturday.

Robert Friend, a newcomer to the Tour, dropped out of a tie for second place with a 72 that left him five shots off the lead. Mark Wiebe had a 73 to trail by eight and a 76 saw Mike Hulbert 11 off the pace. John Adams and Mike Smith, a veteran of the Tour, put themselves within range of the leaders with rounds of 65, the lowest of the day.

Dove poses threat to Wolstenholme

ALTHOUGH the holder of the English amateur championship, Ricky Willison, is unable to defend his title at Deal this week, having successfully embarked on a professional career, a more than adequate replacement is available (John Hennessy writes). TWO women with more than 40 years separating them are determined to prove that bowls, even at the top level, is a game for all ages. Both have qualified for the Liverpool Victoria national championships, which start today at Royal Learnington Spa, in all

Rallying cry as crowds flock to Town Moor

First Sunday meeting voted an overwhelming success

By Richard Evans, racing correspondent

IF ACTIONS speak louder than words, the decision of 23,000 people to go racing at Sunday meeting yesterday will ed any of them having a bet at the track.

Not even the Jockey Club, which masterminded the unofficial lobby of Parliament at Town Moor, could believe the success of yesterday's mission, which developed into a racing

The diehards inside the Home Office and the few remaining neanderthal members of the bookmaking fraternity will have to take stock. As for the Keep Sunday Special brigade, Doncaster provided a simple answer. Sunday was very special for thousands of mums dads and children as they started arriving at the racetrack from 9.30am.

As the runners for the first race went to post shortly after 2.0pm, the crowd matched the number of people who paid to go to this year's Derby at Epsom.

That alone should be enough to persuade John Maior and Kenneth Clarke that the Betting. Gambling and Lotteries Act 1963 is as outdated as the Sunday trading laws and in need of reform so that people can bet on and offcourse - as they do in other leading racing nations.

If they need further convincing, the potential vote-pulling power of Sunday racing should do the trick.

A hint that the sport stands a chance of winning its case with Whitehall was given by the Home Office before racing began yesterday.

"We are only currently looking at the Sunday trading laws. However, we will watch the two trial Sunday racing meetings with interest. When we have done that we will consider whether any change or amendment to the law is necessary," a spokeswoman

While racing was the central attraction, the family day out atmosohere was unmistakeable. Fashion shows, a scud missile display, and bouncy castles competed with shetland pony racing, mime artists, contomionists, Red Rum and Desert Orchid as sideshows for those not besotted by

Sunstone, unawares. As she rounded the mark, she discovered the flow was against her. stopping her in her tracks.

It was not a good weekend for Sunstone. After the first two races of the series, Sunstone appeared to have won both, but the results found little general favour and the international jury decided to review the situation.

The original calculations have been made by computer using a performance curve scoring system which calculates the average wind speed during each race based on the time of the first boat home. After endless protests, it was discovered there was a fault in the software, prompting the jury to resort to another calculation system, which in turn was also found to be inaccurate.

After four days of argument. the computer programme has now been corrected and new results issued giving the Tuborg Trophy race to the American 18 boat collaboration with their team-mate, Gaucho, in second place and the second windward/leeward race to Bwana, of Argentina, with the French boat, Sealance 4, second.

Ringer leads challenge of younger marksmen

BY OUR RIFLE SHOOTING CORRESPONDENT

ANTONY RINGER, of Uppingham Veterans, who won the Queen's Prize at Bisley on Saturday, is typical of the thrusting generation of young shooters who make up a big contribution to British touring teams.

At 25, the Norfolk farmer was the youngest winner for eight years and snatched victory by one point from Hamish Hunter, the widely experienced former captain of Scotland.

After the first half of the final at 900 yards, they shared the lead with Flight Lieutenant Rupert Clark, RAF, and Mirek Kirkillo-Stacewicz of London and Middlesex, all on 219 out of 225.

In a tricky wind at 1,000 yards, Ringer and Hunter kept ahead while Clark dropped back slightly. It looked for a time as though Hunter might draw level, but he dropped a vital point on one of his later shots to finish one point behind, but three in St Jovite accorded high ranking

By RICHARD EVANS RACING CORRESPONDENT

ST JOVITE is officially on a par with Generous and other top winners of the King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes following his stunning six-length victory in Britain's premier all-aged race at Ascot on Saturday. According to Jim Bolger, he is probably better than his distinguished predecessors.

After seeing his record-breaking Irish Derby champion run seven rivals ragged with a combination of elements. with a combination of elegant power and deceptive acceleration, the Cookullen trainer had no hesitation in agreeing he could be the best horse for the past two decades. Time or, to be more precise, his next probable race, the Meadow Meats Irish Champion Stakes at Leopardstown on September 13, followed by the Ciga Prix de l'Arc de more. What is certain is that racing has a new and muchneeded star.

With the older horses -Saddlers' Hall, Opera House, Sapience and Rock Hopper — running precisely to their offi-cial ratings as they finished in a group behind the winner.
Anthony Arkwright, the Jockey Club's middle distance

display into context. He intends giving the win-ner a rating of 135, about 3lb above the average for King George winners over the past 18 years, and only 31b behind Dancing Brave.

Twelve months after Generous was hailed by some as the most impressive King George winner of all time, it hardly seemed possible that racing's summer showpiece could produce another high-class winner.

Yet Stephen Craine the

kicked for home approaching horse I have had and that is the home turn, having made not demeaning any of the virtually all the running, the effect was immediate and devastating for his pursuers. Saddlers' Hall finally wore down Opera House for second

"He's a real one, isn't he. Bolger said as he waited for Craine and St Jovite to return to the winner's enclosure. "He is certainly the best

not demeaning any of the others. He's a better horse than most people of the current generation have had. He is the best Irish Derby winner I have seen and I have seen them all since Tambourine II

Praise indeed considering Nijinsky, Grundy, The Minstrel. Troy, Shergar and Generous have been among those victorious at the Curragh. "The horse has had a very Arc as well as he won today he could go for the Breeders' Cup. But if he had a hard race I would have my doubts." The Breeders' Cup could be an option for next year. "It would not surprise me if the horse stayed in training,"

This is the best mile-and-a-half horse I have seen. He broke the course record at the Curragh, winning by 12 lengths. This is a machine.

When I reached the home turn today I gave him one backhander and he sprouted wings. He won terribly easily." Virginia Kraft Payson, St Jovite's breeder-owner, was still clutching a model leprechaun as she explained the joy

band, Charlie. "I was shaking so hard during the race and at the end I was crying, but I kept saying 'Charlie, come on.' I always believe my husband is out

"He died in 1985 and would have loved nothing more than to win this race. It would have been one of the greatest thrills of his life. I have a great feeling he was out there on the track giving St Jovite a push.

Heaven, it would appear, is not helping those who stand in St Jovite's way.

Improving Toussaud can collect Beeswing Stakes

PAT Eddery, serving the last two days of his five-day suspension, makes way for his brother Paul, who comes in for the plum ride on Toussaud in the Federation Brewery LCL Pils Lager Beeswing Stakes at Newcastle this afternoon.

After two wins in minor races Toussaud stamped herself as an improving filly when winning the Van Geest Criterion Stakes at Newmarket last month. She quickened to take up the lead a furlong out to beat Prince Ferdinary by three-quarters of a length, with Casteddu a further neck back in third.

Toussaud and Casteddu met again at Lingfield two weeks ago when Toussaud put seven lengths between them, on 5lb worse terms, when she finished a shorthead second to Thourios. Casteddu reopposes on a pound better terms here, but

Toussaud also holds Hamas on a line through Prince Ferdinand, who had Hamas back in last place when win-ning the Jersey Stakes at Royal Ascot. That perfor-mance was well below his best form, when he ran Ezzoud to two-and-a-half lengths af Sandown Casteddu was a similar distance behind when Ezzond was third in the St James's Palace Stakes, and there may not be much between them here.

The other main challangers should be Sure Sharp and Vincent O'Brien's Portico. Sure Sharp has already proved that he has the measure of Portico when he finished almost a length ahead at the Curragh last month.

However, Sure Sharp has not won at less than a mile since his juvenile season, and he may find my selection has s shade too much speed for

For the nap, I turn to Wascela to defy top weight in the Martini Bianco Summer Handicap. Waseela has been a model of consistency in her though the handicapper may not have found her measure when beating Bear With Me by a comfortable-looking twoand a half lengths at Yarmouth last time out.

Her main danger could be Batabanoo, judged on his third place behind Talented Ting at Hamilton. But his form has been somewhat erratic lately, and I feel Waseela makes more appeal. The Newmarket frainer Michael Stoute should be on

most important landmark of his training career when Marina Park landed his first pattern-race win at Ascot on Saturday.

The Middleham trainer set himself two targets this year, to better his 1991 tally of 31 and to win a group race.

He has achieved both at the

🕇 atalonia embraced the world on Saturday night with an emotional opening ceremony that exceeded, in symbolism, song and dance, anything the Olympic Games has experienced. After many Olympics, I always doubt beforehand whether my spirit can again be moved, yet never was it more so than now on this sweltering Mediterranean night on

The Koreans, four years ago, had been classically oriental but, as is their way. detached. The Catalans now gave us full-bodied, aromatic Rioja, an intoxicating spontaneous passion. The Games, opened by King Juan Carlos, were never more alive. For the cynics who say the competitors have become an irrelevance to the show, I doubt if there was a man or woman among the 12,000 who took part in the march past who will not remember this night for the rest of their life.

Occasionally, the symbolism, wonderfully ambitious with its cast of thousands, slightly lost its way. The mythical voyage of Hercules, through stormy Mediterranean seas across a stadium carpeted blue, perhaps demonstrated why Drake, with some help from the weather. put it across the Armada. Yet three hours of Spanish history and have worked wonders for the city of Barcelona, bequeathing it with something of that indefinable magical appeal of Paris, Venice, Rome or Berlin at the beginning of the century. A magic that extends far beyond the realms of sport.

When Plácido Domingo sang his serenade of love and Cristina Hoyos, brightest flame of a fire of flamenco dancers, swept out of the stadium on horseback, the soul of Spain was bared to an audience of three and a half billion. This land of passion caught in its peninsula beyond the Pyrenees, between the haughty French and the shores of Africa, was adding a new dimension to a century of the Olympics. Because this is a nation made famous by Hemingway and El Córdobes, it is not widely understood what a shy people they are.

It was, signficantly, a night when Catalan pride became merged with Spanish dignity. The king's rival at the start was applauded as fighter jets screamed overhead, leaving a trail of the Olympic spectrum.

When Juan Carlos welcomed his people in the local town it was a further healing of the old Franco wounds. Pasqual Maragall, the mayor, and Juan Antonio Samaranch, the IOC president, made their short speeches using

Now is the moment for the athletes' parade. Immediately behind Greece, the traditional leaders, came South Africa, with Jan Tau, the black marathon runner, ways. Nelson Mandela, who was present with 20 heads of state, had travelled to the ceremony by coach side by side with Samaranch.

Amid the turmoil of political geography, the Croatian flag bearer was the Wimbledon finalist, Goran Ivanisevic, while Sweden were led by Stefan Edberg. Every one of the 173 national Olympic committees was there except former Yugoslavia, confined to individual competition: the tiny Cook Islands, headed by the weightlifter, Sam Pera, Djibouti, by the marathon numer, Ahmed Saleh. The former-Soviet Unified Team paraded their 12 autonomous flags, and the Prince of Asturias, yachtsman, led the host team.

ow came the most symbol-ic moment of all. In dark-ness, a line of couriers ran between the massed ranks of competitors, message undisclosed. Floodlights suddenly bathed the arena, and a 6,000 square-metre Olympic flag spread outwards above the heads of the 12,000 athletes and officials, bearing, to the corners of the globe, its message of unity. For tens of thousands of children, the motive force of the Olympic movement will shape some part of their future.

The ceremony closed to the echo of the voices of Domingo, Carreras, Caballe, Pons, Aragall and an unnamed boy-treble silhouetted against the sky, Verdi's "Triumphal March" from Aida, filling the humid night. It was good to have

Haynes hits masterful form to lift

Middlesex

LORD'S: Middlesex (4pts) beat Durham by seven wickets

DURHAM were game. They set Middlesex a target to stretch them. They bowled and fielded pretty well. But Middlesex, this season, have the Sunday League bit be-tween their teeth and they approached this game with a rare sense of purpose. Within a beautifully balanced team. they have several match-winners, none of more evidence than Desmond Haynes, who scored 70 from 84 balls as his team made it 12 matches won out of 12 matches played.

Haynes is a master, with soft hands and the gift of placement, without brute strength. Botham and Gatting are more exciting but no more effective. During yesterday's innings, Haynes passed his own record for Sunday runs made by a Middlesex batsman in a season. That was 632 in 1990, and there are still five matches left in 1992.

With the prolific Roseberry, he compiled 102 for the first wicket, five runs an over coming from the first 20 overs of the Middlesex reply to Durham's 198 for seven, made from the full quota.

Haynes had been dropped at short extra cover when 44 and the total 77; but though Roseberry was well stumped on the leg side off Berry when 44, and Haynes himself superbly caught by the evergreen Parker, there was always Gatting to weigh in with 48 from 51 balls and see Middlesex to within 25 runs of their included a devastating yorker to get rid of Botham at a crucial time.

Having set off with all guns blazing. Botham striking the ball hard and often. Durham needed a longer innings from Larkins to give themselves the best chance of making Middlesex sweat. As it was, a straight six in Williams's first over was quickly followed by Larkins's demise, and after Botham 48 from 44 balls, it was left to Geoff Cook, aged 40 and making his first Sunday appearance since 1990, to hold them together. Cook could well play on merit in the NatWest match at Leicester on Wednesday after this. Certainly, he looked in prime form. But with Parker perhaps unlucky to be given out and Cook himself the subject of a dreadful mix-up before being run out, you never quite had the feeling that Durham had done enough. So it proved, Middlesex winning with seven balls to

☐ A brisk half-century from Richard Harden helped Somerset achieve a 60-run victory over Northamptonshire at to move into third place in the Sunday League table. It was his fifth half-century this season in the competition. Tavaré, their captain, made a useful 45, his highest score this year. Rose, who made 42 from 28 balls, and Snell, 29 from 23 balls, added important late runs and Northamptonshire. who had chosen initially to field, were stymied by some excellent out-cricket, collapsing to be all out for 176 in 39 overs. Rose, Snell and MacLeay took two wickets apiece.

Pakistan are justified in outrage only at their own misfortune

FORTUNE, with her "buffets and rewards" had a greater say than usual in the way things went at Headingley, and, as inevitably happens, the side that lost, in this case Pakistan. will have felt the more hard done by.

Winning the toss was not the blessing that it can be. Having chosen to bat, as Gooch was intending to do had he called right, Pakistan found that by far the best place to be on the first day was in the field.

On the second day, when the sun shone brightly. England were blessed with much the best conditions of the match for batting, and Paki-stan encountered a pair of umpires in obdurate mood. Almost inevitably the Paki-stanis were soon harbouring thoughts about home-town

In that they were no different from other visiting sides, whether to England or any-where else. The wholesale pillorying of Pakistan after they had behaved unques tionably badly at Old Trafford was a good deal too self-rightous for my liking. It implied that they alone

AT THE TEST most levels than there has ever been. In a sense it was providential that the Old Trafford fracas happened when it did, while the International Cricket Council were gathered in force at Lord's. But instead of a collective rocket. relating not so much to the single Old Trafford incident as to the modern trend, ICC managed only a muted response.

Javed, Aqib and the rest were dreadful at Old Trafford, and at Headingley. their frustration at various umpiring decisions was un-concealed. But try talking to some of those who stand as umpires in league cricket almost anywhere in the cricket world if you think that such behavious is exclusive to the Pakistanis. It is not, and the reason for that is weak government, stretching back over the years.

Happily, England have a fairly wholesome record under Gooch, without whose batting in this match, as against West Indies at Headingley a year ago, England would have been dead and gone. As for fortune's treatment of England's players at Headingley, some, of

Dismissed within five minutes of each other on Saturday, Hick and Ramprakash were both unlucky. Hick to receive the sort of ball, a very fast, inswinging yorker, that great batsmen hope to avoid even when they are well set, and Ramprakash to get the short straw with the leg

But to some extent players of all games make their own luck. Last Friday Atherton did. On his recent county record few would have bought his runs for anything much more than a dozen or so when he was told to pad up and go in first with Gooch. Had Pakistan lost their last wicket a few overs earlier on the second morning Stewart would have

In the event, and much to his credit, Atherton took the chance to reestablish himself as Gooch's partner, as by the time Stewart went in 24 hours later batting had be come, again, a more difficult proposition.

If the credit Stewart has built up in the last year is not to be put at risk he will have to be treated with care. His versatility is obviously an asset, but it is as a batsman. going in early, that he has given outstanding service.

By IVO TENNANT EVENTS at Headingley have, inevitably, overshadowed one of the most gripping, and significant, Britannic Assurance county championship matches of the season. At Grace Road, Essex, the leaders, could hardly have contemplated beating Leicestershire. 47 points behind them in second place, after they were bowled out for 75 in their first innings. Today they can do There was a possibility on the first day that the pitch might be reported, although that was soon discounted. On Saturday it was a surface transformed, seemingly by the groundsman's mower. Leicestershire, at one point 142 for one, were dismissed for 230 by an attack lacking Foster. Even so, that left Essex 349 to win. By the close, Prichard and Stephenson had made 103 of them without loss. Essex have achieved some memorable victories of late, mostly through making runs against the clock. Should they win today, they would deserve nothing less than the championship.

As for plaudits to individuals, nobody deserved them more than Berry, the Durham off-spinner. At the start of their match against Middlesex he had just 14 first-class wickets to his name, from four years with Yorkshire and such cricket as he has had this season. He has now taken a further seven, made a career-best score of 76 and given Durham

a chance of achieving victory in a nin-chase today, Another spinner, Donelan, evidently favours playing Gloucestershire. He took ten for 136 in one match against them last year. On Saturday he returned career-best figures of six for 77 at Cheltenham as Sussex gained a first-innings lead of 103.

help secure tense Test victory over Pakistan at Headingley

HEADINGLEY (fourth day of five): England beat Pakistan unfit to bowl, Pakistan put the ENGLAND'S first Test victory over Pakistan for ten years was achieved with a day, but precious little else, to spare, Six wickets may seem an emphatic margin but the gathering of a mere 99 runs to level this Cornhill series occupied more than three hours in an atmosphere as comfortable as a dentist's waiting-room.

There were moments, at 27 for two and 65 for four, when Pakistan's three-man attack hinted at the outrageous but, fittingly, the game was settled by David Gower. The one survivor of England's last win over Pakistan, on this same ground 16 Tests ago, Gower now kept his head while all around him were in danger of losing theirs.

Here was the evidence to silence any who still doubt Gower's sense of commitment. His unbeaten 31 occupied 131 minutes and negotiated a minefield of fine bowling and desperate tension. Over two innings, Gower batted 192 minutes, faced 146 balls and made only 49 runs. Crucially, however, he was undefeated and has surely now extended his touring career by another winter.

As Headingley once more revived England's fortunes. just as it did last June with the victory over West Indies, the common denominator was the decisive role played by Graham Gooch. If England were to win, against opposi-tion who patently bowl better than they do, it was always likely to demand a starring role from the captain. He responded as he has done so often in the past, and if his seven-hour century in the first innings was the difference between the sides, his two hours for 37 yesterday was scarcely less important. Gooch's century was the ninth in his last 21 Tests. His previous 77 Tests produced only eight. Yesterday, he moved above Clive Lloyd and into the top ten all-time runscorers in Test cricket, a standing few would now seek to deny him. While he was at the crease, it was always likely England would win; had he gone early, in either innings, it might have been different. Yesterday's cricket was never less than fraught and sometimes bordered on the explosive. Pitch invasions, largely by Pakistani supporters, were a regular irritant and, even with so few runs at batsmen, not to mention the umpires, through a harrowing

Even when subjected to instant replays on the giant screen, thankfully halted on Saturday. their demeanour was correct throughout, even if some of their decisions might not have been. Pakistan will think they had the rough end of the justice in this game, not that this remotely excuses the renewed posturing which ac-

Rashid Latif. One of three substitutes, he reacted to two decisions given in Gower's favour during an over from Mushtaq, first by running provocatively down the pitch from slip towards Kitchen, and then by theatrically hurling his cap to the ground. This time, to his credit, Javed Miandad sought to restore control. One lesson of Old Trafford, at least, has been absorbed At the end, however. Miandad was critical of the Headingley pitch and, for all that it created its customary compulsive entertainment, year after year it flouts the official edict as to what constitutes a suitable surface

The bounce was at times scandalously low and it was only the woeful lack of pace, nothing to commend any pitch, which prevented it being constantly treacherous. That it suited England the better cannot be denied. Yorkshire's committee met yesterday and there is talk of digging up the square. Gooch and his players may have put in a plea for mercy.

It took them until half an hour after lunch to take the six remaining Pakistan wickets yesterday but, as in the first innings. Salim Malik was unconquered. No Pakistani has made a century on this ground in seven Tests but, in 1987. Malik made 99: here. he was unbeaten on 82 and

He played wonderfully well, watchful and quick-footed while support existed, preconceived in attack when joined by the tail. England, meanwhile, proved how canny the selectors had been as Mallender and Pringle, the favoured horses for this unique course, took their match aggregates to eight and five wickets respectively. Mallender's match figures were eight for 122, his debut possibly the best by an England seam bowler since John Lever took ten wickets in Delhi in 1976. But Malik had carried Pakistan into enough of a lead to keep victory alive. and when Waqar followed his five-wicket blitz on Saturday by removing Atherton and Smith in his fourth and fifth overs, 99 looked a long way Gooch and Gower have almost 16,000 Test runs between them but the 68 they shared here will have been among the sweetest. No sweeter, however, than a mere 12 not out will have seemed to Ramprakash. He had batted only five balls in his two previous innings in the series. and it took him 20 balls to score now. Neale decides to join club side for rest of season

THE fickle nature of sport will not be wasted on Phil Neale, the out of favour Worcester shire captain. A month after leading his county to victory in the Benson and Hedges Cup last August, he was relieved of his leadership role at New Road. Ever since, he seems to have been surplus to requirements. He has now decided to join the Midlands club championship leaders, Barnt Green. He will play for them for the remainder of the season. "I don't think anyone could have mapped out what's hap-

"You've just got to let those people in charge get on with it and do things their way. It's been frustrating not playing but there's nothing to be gained from looking back."

Pain of defeat: Moorhouse realises he has lost his Olympic title yesterday

Chances of British medals vanished in the first 50 metres. Gillingham, from Birmingham, came out of a poor dive hugging the lane rope. His 29.76 seconds halfway split was almost half a second down on his best.

Moorhouse, aged 28, was also slower than he has been and tightened up in the final 50 metres. He had suggested that this would be his last race. win or lose, but a drugs test kept him from media questions after his race. In Moorhouse all hope was held on faith. He had not raced since his defeat at the European championships a year ago, and had repeatedly said he would always be an Olympic champion whatever

The slight straining to Gillingham's left thigh had become a serious injury "20 metres from home in the heat this morning," Barry Prime, Gillingham's coach, said. Gillingham then spent a restless four hours on a physiotherapist's couch.

A hint of things to come came when Gillingham, the Commonwealth record holder. appeared for the final at 6.28pm clutching an ice pack to his leg. He was also clearly nervous, false starting as he had done in the heat almost eight hours before. At the end of the race, he appeared to be in agony and was immediately taken to the medical room, where four electrodes were strapped to his leg.

"I still thought I was in the frame with 30 metres to go. The pain of it all really hit me about three or four minutes after the race. But the 200 is my main event and its a less explosive start so I should be better off."

The result, true to the unpredictable nature of the Olympic Games, was also a shock for Rozsa, who had looked invincible before last night, unbeaten as he had been by all except Karoly Guttler, his team mate who failed to make the final . In Diebel, who last year recovered from two broken wrists, the United States found his fourth Olympic 100 metres breast stroke champion. The shaven-headed student left nothing to chance, turning third ahead of Rozsa and never relinquishing the lead.

McLean suffers cruel twist

FROM JOHN HENNESSY IN NOORDWLIK

MICHAEL McLean, an immensely likeable young man from Kent, suffered a heartbreaking experience on the last day of the lucrative Heineken Dutch Open golf championship yesterday. Against all expectations, given his modest reputation and indifferent record this season, he came home with a thrilling birdie at the last to frustrate his powerful playing partner, Bernhard Langer. He climbed bration of victory. He had scored 70, two under par. for a total of 276, 12 under par. Or had he?

He then faced the gruelling experience of questions being asked about his stroke from the rough at the 1 ith.

McLean was seen to move several pieces of debris but including, it seemed from television, a growing strand of bramtwo strokes for improving his lie and fell back to a tie for third place with Gary Evans. The £100.000 first prize that had seemed to be his was reduced to £33,780. That left Langer and Gordon Brand Jr to play off for the title but somehow it had lost its appeal. Brand had played superbly to record a 67, five strokes fewer than Langer, but neither would have wanted to

McLean, accepting his disappointment like a man, explained how the breach of rule had happened. "I was about to play, only a seven-iron, when Bernhard called across to ask whose shot it was," he said. "Normally I am so careful. I ask for rulings 100 times out of 100. This seemed just a long snaky piece of matter and I had no idea it was still

to their surprise, played. the 17th as their first. extra hole, the very hole that had cost Brands stroke and outright to tory. Again he missed the green in the play-off but got home with two putts, as Langer did with chip and putt. The drama had still not ended. Brand's second at the 18th finished behind a spectator stand in a horrible lie, but he was allowed line-ofsight relief. His pitch went through the green and Langer was finally left with two putts from 18 feet for the title and he is not nowadays, the kind of man to foozle a chance like that. But it was a sad anticlimax at the end of the day of swaying fortunes in which McLean was defeated not by other golfers but by the rule book.

We feel bad for Michael," Brand said afterwards, and Langer regarded it as "a weird way to win. Certainly the most unusual victory I haye ever had."

RESULTS: 277: G Brand Jr. 72, 71. 67, 67: B Langer (Car), 68, 68, 69, 72. Langer won play-off at sectoral extra hole. 278: G Ferrer, 70, 67, 71. 70: M McLean, 69, 67, 70, 72, 279: 0 Cryster, 72, 68, 69, 78, 78, 50; 60;
